The synthesis consists in assuming the causes discovered and established as principles, and by them explaining the phenomena proceeding from them, and proving the explanations. Newton.

In synthesis, we reason from axioms, definitions, and already known principles, until we arrive at a desired conclusion. Of this nature are most of the processes of geometrical reasoning. In synthesis, we ascend from particular cases to general ones; in analysis, we descend from general cases to particulars. Davies & Peck.

3. (Surg.) The uniting or the approximation of parts that are divided. Dunglison.

4. (Chem.) The uniting of elements into a compound, as of oxygen and hydrogen into water; — the opposite of analysis. Thomson.

SYN-TÛT'IC, a. [Gr. συνθετικός; Fr. synthesis.] Relating to synthesis; proceeding by synthesis; conjoining; compounding; forming composition; deductive.

Philosophy is divided into two parts, the synthetic and the analytic. The synthetic part is that which proceeds from the general to the particular. Holmgren.

Synthetical method, the method of reasoning by synthesis; the deductive method. Davies & Peck.

SÛS-TA-SIS, n. [Gr. σύστασις.] The consistence of any thing; constitution. [R.] Burke.

SÛS'TÛM (sí'st'm), n. [Gr. σύστημα; συστήμι, to place together; σύν, together, and στήμι, to put, to place; L. systema; It. & Sp. sistema; Fr. système.]

1. A number of things combined or acting together; a combination of parts into a whole; a connected view of all the truths of some department of knowledge; a complete body of any art or science; a collection of rules and principles; the whole of any science, art, or doctrine; as, "A system of divinity, of philosophy, or of astronomy"; "The solar system."

The best way to learn any science is to begin with a regular system, or a short and plain scheme of that science well drawn up into a narrow compass. Watts.

Every truth has relation to some other. And we should try to trace the facts of our knowledge so as to see them in their several bearings. Thus we do when we frame them into a system. To do so legitimately, we must begin by analysis and end with synthesis. Fleming.

Atoms or systems into ruin hurled,
And now a bubble burst, and now a world. Pope.

2. A theory; a hypothesis; a scheme; a plan; a classification; an arrangement.

3. Regular method, course, order, or process; as, "To work without system."

4. (Astron.) An hypothesis of a certain order and arrangement of the heavenly bodies, by which their apparent motions are explained. Brande.

5. (Mus.) An interval composed, or supposed to be composed, of several lesser ones. Brande.

6. (Fine Arts.) A collection of rules and principles upon which an artist works. Brande.

Syn.—System is the arrangement of the different parts of any matter or science into a whole or a single body; method is the manner of such arrangement. A system of philosophy, astronomy, or theology; a regular plan; a judicious scheme, method in conducting business. — See THEORY.

SŸS-TEM-ÄT'IC, } a. [Gr. συστηματικός; Fr. sŸs-TEM-ÄT'IC-AL, } systématique.] Relating to, or partaking of, system; organically arranged; methodical; regular; orderly.

He has added a systematic table of them. Pennant.

Syn.—See METHODICAL.

SŸS-TEM-ÄT'IC-AL-LY, ad. In the form of a system; methodically. Warburton.

SŸS-TEM-Ä-TİSM, n. The reduction of facts to a system. Dunglison.

SŸS-TEM-Ä-TİST, n. 1. One who forms a system; a systematizer. Pennant.

SŸS-TEM-Ä-TİZE [sŸs'tem-ä-tiz, P. Ja. K. Sm. R.

C. O. B.; sŸs'tem-ä-tiz, W.; sŸs'tem-ä-tiz', J.], v. a. To reduce to a system; to methodize; to harmonize; to coordinate; to regulate.

Diseases were healed, and buildings erected, before medicine and architecture were systematized into arts. Harris.

The . . . Goths had some general notions of the feudal policy, which were gradually systematized. Lyttleton.

"I have met with this word nowhere but in Mason's Supplement to Johnson, and there I find it accented in a different way from what I have always heard it in conversation. In those circles which I have frequented the accent has been placed on the first syllable, and if we survey the words of this termination, we shall find that ize is added to every word without altering the place of the accent, and that, consequently, systematize ought to have the accent on the first syllable. This reasoning is specious; but when we consider that this word is not formed from the English word system, but from the Greek συστημα, or the later Latin systema, we shall find that the accent is very properly placed on the second syllable, according to the general rule. If we place the accent on the first, we ought to spell the word systemize, and then it would be analogically pronounced; but, as our best writers and speakers have formed the word on the Greek and Latin plan, it ought to be written and pronounced as Mr. Mason has given it." Walker.—In this instance, Walker seems not to have been followed by any orthoepist.

SŸS-TEM-Ä-TİZ-ER, n. A systematist. Harris.

SŸS-TEM-Ä-TÖL'O-QŸY, n. [Gr. συστημα, a system, and lógos, a discourse.] A treatise or discourse on the various systems. Month. Rev.

Line of syzygies, the line passing through the centre of the earth and the moon when the latter body is in conjunction with, or in opposition to, the sun. Lardner.

T.

T, the twentieth letter of the English alphabet, is a mute consonant. In itself it has but one sound, as in till, it; combined with h it has two sounds, one hard or sharp, as in thin, breath; the other soft, flat, or vocal, as in this, breathe; combined with i, before a vowel, it usually represents the sound of sh, as in nation, motion, unless preceded by s, as in question. In etymology it is convertible with d, as Ger. tag, Eng. day; sometimes also with s or z, as Ger. wasser, Eng. water, Ger. zahn, Eng. tame. It is used in the arts as an adjective prefix, to denote any thing in the form of a capital letter T; as a T bandage, used in surgical operations; a T square, an instrument used in drawing by architects and engineers; a T rail, &c. As a numeral, it was used among the ancients for 160; with a dash over it (T̄), it signified 160,000.

To tang bees, to ring a bell, or make some loud, ringing noise, to call the swarm together. [Local, Eng.] Baker's Northamp. Gloss.

TÂN'ĠEN-CY, n. The state or the quality of touching or being tangent.

TÂN'ĠENT, a. (Geom.) Touching a curve or surface at a single point. Brande.

Curved surfaces tangent to each other, curved surfaces which touch each other in a point or straight line, and have the same tangent plane at that point or at every point of that line. — Curves tangent to each other at a common point. curves which have a common rectilinear tangent at that point. — Tangent line to a plane curve, a straight line having but one point in common with the curve, and all its points in the neighborhood lying on the convex side of the curve. — Tangent to a curve at a point of inflection, a straight line regarded as forming two tangents, one to each branch, and lying in opposite directions.

TÂN'ĠENT, n. [L. tango, tangens, to touch; It., Sp., & Fr., tangente, a tangent.]

1. (Geom.) A term having various applications, but most commonly applied to magnitudes, as straight lines, plane curves, and curved surfaces, which have only one point in common with other magnitudes. Thus the tangent to an arc of a circle is a straight line which has only one point in common with it, and which, if produced, will not cut it. In the figure the lines A, C, &c., are tangents. Da. & P.

A curve is sometimes conceived to be coincident with an inscribed polygon whose sides are so small that they may, without sensible error, be considered as coinciding with their arcs. The extremities of any side of this polygon are called consecutive points of the curve, and the prolongation of such a side is called a tangent. Hence a tangent is defined to be a straight line passing through two consecutive points of a curve. The definition approximates to absolute exactness as the length of the side approximates to zero. Analogous views are held respecting tangent surfaces. Davies & Peck.

2. (Trigonometry.) In a circle whose radius is unity, a straight line perpendicular to the extremity of the radius passing through one extremity of an arc, and terminated by a secant passing through the other extremity. Elliot.

Artificial or logarithmic tangents, the logarithms of the tangents of arcs. — Natural tangents, tangents of arcs expressed by the natural numbers. Hutton.

TÂN'ĠEN'TIAL, a. Relating to, or having the direction of, a tangent. Search.

Tangential force, the force or inertia which inclines a body, moving in a curve, to fly off in the direction of a tangent to that curve. Lib. of Useful Knowledge.

TÂN'ĠEN'TIAL-LY, ad. In the direction of a tangent; as a tangent. Wright.

TÂN'ĠENT-PLÂNE, n. (Geom.) A plane which touches a curved surface in one point, as in the case of a sphere, or in a straight line, as in the case of a cylinder; — that is, a plane which meets, but does not cut, the surface in that point or that line. Lib. of Useful Knowledge.

TÂNG'-FĠSH, n. A name given in Shetland to the seal. Simmonds.

TÂN'ĠHIN (tân'gin), n. (Bot.) A plant of Madagascar, the kernel of the fruit of which is about the size of an almond, and a very powerful poison, and called Tanghin-poison; Cerbera tanghin, or Tanghinia venenata. Eng. Cyc.

TÂN'ĠHINE, n. (Chem.) A crystallizable, poisonous principle obtained from Tanghinia Madagascariensis. Gregory.

TÂN'ĠHIN'-Ġ-A, n. (Bot.) A genus of plants of the order Apocynaceae, or dog-banes, the kernel of the fruit of which is a very powerful poison. — See TANGHIN. Baird.

TÂN'ĠI-BL'Ġ-TY, n. The state or the quality of being tangible; tangibility. Cudworth.

TÂN'ĠI-BLE, a. [L. tangibilis; tango, to touch; Fr. tangible.] That may be touched; perceptible to the touch. Locke.

TÂN'ĠI-BLE-NÉSS, n. The state or the quality of being tangible; tangibility. Clarke.

TÂN'ĠI-BLY, ad. So as to be touched. Clarke.

TÂN'ĠLE (tân'gl), v. a. [Of uncertain etymology. — Perhaps from A. S. tian, to tie. Richardson.] [i. TANGLED; pp. TA'GLING, TANGLED.]

1. To interweave or intertwine confusedly; to implicate; to complicate; to entangle; to snarl; as, "To tangle thread or hair."

TANK'-ËN-ÇINE, n. A combined engine and tender for supplying water for a locomotive. Sim.

+ TANK'LING, n. A tinkling. Beau. & Fl.

TÂN'NATE, n. (Chem.) A salt consisting of tannic acid and a base. Gregory.

TÂN'NER, n. One who tans hides. Moxon.

TÂN'NIC, a. Pertaining to tan. Ure.

Tannic acid, (Chem.) a solid, uncrystalline, colorless, inodorous acid, of a very astringent taste, soluble in water, and forming with peroxide of iron a compound which is the basis of common ink, and with gelatine a compound which is the basis of leather; — called also gallo-tannic acid. It is obtained pure from the gall-nut, an excrescence upon the leaves and shoots of certain species of oak, caused by the puncture of a small insect made for the purpose of depositing its eggs. Miller. Farnell.

TÂN'NI-ËR, n. See TANIER. Clarke

TÂN'NIN, n. A term applied to various forms of the astringent principle used in tanning. Most of them have an acid reaction, and resemble each other in properties, though they differ in chemical composition. Miller.

TÂN'NING, n. 1. The act or process of converting hides into leather by cleansing them of hair, flesh, &c., and saturating them with tannin, or some form of the astringent principle contained in the bark of certain trees and plants. A portion of extractive matter from the tan employed also combines with the hide and gives it its brown color. Bigelow.

2. The state of becoming tanned or embrowned by the sun. Bp. Taylor.

TÂN'-PÏT, n. A pit in which hides are put in the process of tanning. Booth.

TÂN-TA-LÏZ'ING-LY, ad. By tantalizing. Clarke.

TÂN'TA-LÛS, n. [L. from Gr. Τάνταλος.]

1. (Myth.) A son of Jupiter and Pluto, who was punished in the lower world, by being afflicted with thirst and hunger, and placed in water which always receded from him as soon as he attempted to drink, while over his head hung branches of fruit which receded whenever he attempted to grasp them. In addition to this, there was suspended over his head a huge rock, ever threatening to crush him. Wm. Smith.

2. (Ornith.) A genus of wading birds of the sub-family Tantalina. Baird.

TÂN'TA-LÛS-S-CÛP, n. A philosophical toy, consisting of a cup, into a hole in the bottom of which the longer leg of a siphon is cemented. When water is slowly poured into the cup, it does not rise above the level of the bend, being discharged through the siphon as fast as it is supplied. If the supply ceases the cup is soon emptied. The siphon is concealed by the hollow figure of a man, whose chin is on a level with the bend of the siphon; so that the figure stands, like Tantalus in the fable, up to the chin in water, but unable to quench his thirst. Brande.

TÂN'TA-MÖUNT, a. [Fr. tant (L. tantus), so much, and monter, to mount.] Equivalent in value or meaning; equal; commensurate.

God hath inserted it into our reasonable natures, or by his providence hath conveyed it into the minds of all men, which is tantamount unto it. Glanville.

+ TÂN'TA-MÖUNT, v. n. To be equivalent.

That which in God's estimate may tantamount to a direct undervaluing. Bp. Taylor.

TÁP-I-Ó'CA, n. A starch used for food, prepared chiefly from the root of the manioc or mandioc plant (Jatropha manihot of Linnæus, Manihot utilisima, or Janipha manihot), by expressing the juice, which is poisonous, and carefully washing and drying the fecula;—called by the Indians of South America manioc. Ure.

—The manioc plant is cultivated for food all over the tropical parts of the world. There are two varieties of it, distinguished by the names of sweet and bitter. The latter, if eaten in the recent state, is highly poisonous from its containing hydrocyanic (prussic) acid. The root, weighing as much as thirty pounds, is reduced into a pulp, which having been washed and subjected to pressure and heat to free it from the poison, the residue is cassava. The expressed juice deposits starch in the form of a powder, which is repeatedly washed in cold water and dried by exposure to heat. The rupture of a part of the starch granules makes them adherent, and thus produces the characteristic consistency of the tapioca of commerce. If dried without heat, it is pulverulent. Lindley, Wood & Bache.

TÁP'IR, n. (Zool.) A pachydermatous mammal, of the family Elephantidae and genus Tapirus, allied to the rhinoceros, and to the hog, and characterized by having the muzzle prolonged into a small, mobile, but scarcely prehensile, trunk, a very short tail, and three pairs of cutting teeth, and one pair of small canine teeth, in each jaw. Baird.

—“If you turn to a map of Spain, you will take note at its southern point, and running out into the Straits of Gibraltar, of a promontory, which from its position is admirably adapted for commanding the entrance of the Mediterranean Sea, and watching the exit and entrance of all ships. A fortress stands upon this promontory, called now, as it was also called in the times of the Moorish domination in Spain, ‘Tarifa,’ the name, indeed, is of Moorish origin. It was the custom of the Moors to watch from this point all merchant-ships going into, or coming out of, the Midland Sea, and, issuing from this strong-hold, to levy duties according to fixed rates on all merchandises passing in and out of the straits; and this was called, from the place where it was levied, 'tarifa,' or 'tariff,' and in this way we have acquired the word." Trench.

TAR'TAR, n. 1. (Geog.) A native or an inhabitant of Tartary, a country formerly occupying nearly all the middle portion of Asia. P. Cyc.

2. An ill-natured person. Clarke.

To catch a Tartar, to attack one who overcomes or injures his assailant; to attempt to take an enemy and be taken or beaten by him.

The name Tartars, or, more correctly, Tatars (signifying, in the Mongol language, "a tributary people"), once designated a great number of different nations in Middle Asia and Eastern Europe, which, according to general opinion, were of one common origin. It has, however, gradually become a collective name, under which are comprehended different nations of Mongol, Turkish, and even Finnish origin. The incorrect orthography Tartars occurs as early as the appearance of the Mongols in Europe, and was probably introduced by superstitious monks and writers, who, struck with the seeming analogy between Tatar and Tartarus, believed them to have come from the infernal regions. P. Cyc.

TAR-TÁRĒ-AN, a. [Gr. τάρταρος; Tátrapos, Tartarus; L. tartareus; It. & Sp. tartareo; Fr. tartareus, tartarien.] Hellish; infernal.

Mixed with tartarean sulphur. Milton.

Tartarean southern-wood, (Bot.) An evergreen shrub; Artemisia santonica; — called also tartarean wormwood.

Tartarean moss, a lichen growing in the north of Europe, from which the three coloring substances, litmus, orchil, and cudbear, may be obtained; Lecanora tartarea. Wood & Baché.

TAR'TAR-E-MÉT'IC, n. (Chem.) A crystallizable double salt, consisting of tartaric acid, potassa, teroxide of antimony and water; double tartrate of potassa and antimony; tartarized antimony; — used in medicine as an emetic. Miller.

TAR-TÁRĒ-OÜS, a. [See TARTAREAN.] 1. Of, or pertaining to, Tartarus; tartarean; hellish.

The black, tartareous, cold, infernal diags. Milton.

2. Consisting of tartar. Grew.

TAR-TÁRI-AN, a. (Geog.) Relating to Tartary, its language, or inhabitants. Ency.

TAR-TÁRI-AN, n. A Tartar. Old Play.

TAR-TÁR'IC, a. 1. Relating to Tartary. Wright.

2. (Chem.) Noting a very soluble, white, crystalline acid, extracted from tartar, isomeric with racemic acid, and having a remarkable tendency to form double salts, several of which constitute important medicines; — extensively used by the calico printer and dyer, and in preparing effervescing draughts with alkaline bicarbonates. Miller.

There are two varieties of tartaric acid, dextro-tartaric and lævo-tartaric, distinguished by the peculiarities of their crystals, and by their solutions rotating the plane of polarization of polarized light in opposite directions. They are identical in chemical composition, but they are dissimilar in chemical properties when combined with bodies capable of rotating the plane of polarization of polarized light. Thus dextro-tartaric acid forms with asparagine a crystalline compound, while lævo-tartaric acid forms with it a gummy mass. Miller.

TAR'TAR-I-NÁT-ĒD, a. (Chem.) Combined with tartarine. Wright.

TAR'TA-RINE, n. (Chem.) A name formerly applied by Kirwan to potash. Ure.

TĒA (tē), n. [Chinese tcha, cha, tha; It. & Sp. té; Fr. thé.]

1. A name applied most commonly to the dried leaves of the Thea bohea, and Thea viridis, otherwise called Camellia bohea, and Camellia viridis, evergreen shrubs, natives of China and Japan, the infusion of which is extensively used as a beverage. Lindley. Loudon.

2. The different kinds of tea arranged in the order of their excellence are as follows:—The green teas are Gunpowder, Imperial, Hyson, Young Hyson, Hyson-skin, and Twankay: the black teas are Pekoe, Souchong, Congou, and Bohea. Hyson consists of leaves gathered in the spring; Young Hyson, of leaves gathered in the early part of spring. Hyson-skin is the refuse of Hyson. Gunpowder is a more carefully picked Hyson, the best rolled and rounded leaves being selected. Pekoe consists of the leaf-buds of the plant picked early in the spring, and is sometimes called "White-blossom tea," from having intermixed with it, to give it a higher perfume, a few blossoms of a species of olive (Olea fragrans), a native of China. The inferior qualities are made, as in the case of Hyson, from the second, third, and fourth crops. McCulloch. Tomlinson.—The pleasant taste and delightful scent for which tea is so highly prized, are developed by the roasting which the leaves undergo in the process of drying; and the inquiries of Mr. Fortune have shown that green and black teas may be prepared at will from the same leaves, gathered at the same time and under the same circumstances. An outline of the process for the two kinds is as follows: For green teas, the leaves are heated in shallow pans over a brisk wood fire almost immediately after they are gathered; they are then thrown upon a table, and rolled with the hands; lastly, they are put again into the pan, and quickly dried, being kept in rapid motion by the hands of the workmen.

Thus prepared, they are of a dullish-green color, but become brighter afterwards. For black teas, the leaves are spread out in the air for some time after they are gathered; they are then further tossed about till they become soft and flaccid, when they are thrown into heaps, and allowed to lie for about an hour or a little longer, undergoing a slight fermentation; they are afterwards rolled upon a table in the form of a ball, the object being to get rid of a portion of the moisture, and at the same time to twist the leaves; and after being roasted in the pans, and exposed for a few hours to the air and sun, they are dried slowly over charcoal fires. The produce of different districts varies in quality and flavor with the climate, the soil, and the variety of the tea-plant cultivated, as well as with the period at which the leaves are gathered, and with the mode of drying them. Johnston.—The most important constituents of tea in the form in which it is used, in infusion, are an essential oil to which it owes its aroma, caffeine, or theine, a nitrogenized compound, analogous to caseine, and an astringent principle which is a modification of tannin. Müller.

2. A beverage or liquor made by the infusion of the dried leaves of the Chinese or other tea-plants. Walker.

3. Any beverage made by the infusion of vegetables; as, "Sage tea"; "Pennyroyal tea."

4. Supper. [Colloquial.] Simmonds.

Tea was hardly known in England till after 1650. Samuel Pepys, secretary to the Admiralty, states in his "Diary," Sept. 26, 1661, "I sent for a cup of tea (a China drink), of which I had never drunk before." It was thus advertised in the "Mercurius Politicus," of London, Sept. 30, 1658: "That excellent and by all physicians approved China drink, called by the Chinese tea, by other nations tay, alias tea, is sold at the Sultaness Head Coffee House, by the Royal Exchange." It seems to have been formerly pronounced ta, as is indicated by these lines of Pope:—

Here thou, great Anna, whom three realms obey,
 Dost sometimes counsel take and sometimes tea.

Tea, which, at the time when Monk brought the army of Scotland to London, had been handed around to be staid at and just touched with the lips, as a great rarity from China, was, eight years later, a regular article of import, and was soon consumed in such quantities that financiers began to consider it a fit subject for taxation. Macaulay.

In 1667 the East India Company imported tea for the first time to the amount of 100 lbs. Baird.

TEĒTH, v. n. [i. TEETHED; pp. TEETHING, TEETHED.] To breed teeth; to be at the time or period of dentition. Arbutnot.

TEĒTH'ING, n. The act or the time of breeding or forming teeth; dentition. Dunglison.

TEĒ-TŌ'TAL, a. Entire; complete; total.

A modern cant word, formed by reduplication, the syllable tee being used for the letter t. By some written teetotal, on the supposition that it implies the use of tea, instead of intoxicating liquors. — See TEETOTALISM. Ed. Rev.—The following account is given of the formation of this word, and of its application as now used: "The simple facts are, that when the question of reviving the old temperance pledge, so as to exclude all intoxicating liquors, was under consideration in Preston [Eng.], a workman of the name of Richard Turner applied to the proposal, not a cant word, but one long in use as an idiomatic local expression—the term teetotal. He had probably heard and uttered it hundreds of times before. The formation of the word is clear enough—the first syllable tee being the mere duplication of the initial letter t of total, for the sake of greater emphasis and force. Its application to total abstinence from intoxicating liquors was accidental; and the use of it by Richard Turner would probably have escaped observation, had he not, through a habit of stammering, drawn the attention of the people to the distinction he was wishing to convey." Dawson Burns, Notes & Queries, 1855.

TEĒ-TŌ'TAL-ER, n. An advocate for, or one who practises, teetotalism. Qu. Rev.

TEĒ-TŌ'TAL-ISM, n. The act of carrying a principle or practice to the greatest extreme;—particularly total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors. [A modern cant term.] Qu. Rev.

That teetotalism, whether sound or not in theory, has already done good work, is proved by the extraordinary results produced by it in Ireland. N. Brit. Rev.

"The syllable tee means the letter t, and this means temperance, and temperance-totalism means the principle of abstaining totally from fermented liquors, in distinction from the principle of temperance simply, or abstinence from spirituous liquors, but not from the moderate use of beer or wine." Smart.

TEĒ-TŌ'TAL-LY, ad. Entirely; totally. J. C. Neal.

TEĒ-TŌ'TUM, n. A small top made to spin by twirling it with the fingers. Simmonds.

I have seen him [Lord Nelson] spin a teetotum a whole evening for the amusement of some children. S. Rogers.

TEĒ'MENT, n. [L.] A tegument. Brande.

TEĒ'U-LAR-LY, ad. In a tegular manner. Smart.

TEĒ'U-MĒNT, n. [L. tegumentum, a covering; tego, to cover; Sp. tegumento; Fr. tégument.]

1. Any natural covering or envelope.

The gardener could crush the insect, if it commenced the attack on the external tegument. Knox.

2. [Anat.] A covering or envelope; an integument;—the general covering of the body; the skin. Dunglison.

3. [Ent.] The covering of the wing of orthopterous insects. Brande.

Syn.—Tegument, or integument, is a natural covering; covering and cover are artificial. The skin of animals, the shell of shell-fish, and the skin of some vegetables and fruits, are their teguments or integuments.

TEĒ-U-MĒNT'A-RY, a. Pertaining to, or consisting of, teguments. P. Cyc.

TEĒ-HĒE' (tē-hē), n. A tittering laugh; a titter. Tehee, quoth she, and clapt the window to. Chaucer.

TEĒ-HĒE', v. n. To titter; to giggle. Hudibras.

TEĒL (tēl), n. [L. tīlla.] [Bot.] The lime-tree, or linden. — See LINDEN.

From purple violets and the teal they bring Their gathered jewels, and nife all the spring. Addison.

TEĒINDS, n. pl. [Scottish Law.] Tithes. Forbes.

TEINE (tān), n. A disease in hawks. Ash.

† TEIN'LĀND, n. [Eng. Law.] Land granted by the crown to a thane or lord. Burriell.

TEĒ'NQ-SCŌPE (tē'nq-skōp), n. [Gr. telōo, to extend, and skōpō, to see.] A telescope formed by combining prisms in a particular manner, so that the chromatic aberration of the light is corrected, and the linear dimensions of objects seen through them increased or diminished;—called also prism-telescope. Brande.

TEĒINT (tint), n. [Fr. teinte.] Tint. Dryden.

TEĒ-A-MŌ'NĒS, n. pl. [Gr. Telamones; L. telamones.] [Arch.] Colossal male figures used like Caryatides, as supporters of an entablature or cornice;—called also Atlantes. Fairholt.

TEĒ'LA-RY [tē'la-re, P. Ja. Sm. K.; tē'la-rē, K. C. Wr. Wb.], a. [L. tela, a web.] Spinning or weaving webs. "Telary spiders." Browne.

TEĒ'E-DU, n. [Zool.] The stinkard. Baird.

TEĒ'E-GRĀM, n. [Gr. tēle, afar off, and grāma, a writing.] Any thing written by telegraph; a telegraphic message or despatch.

Not an unnecessary word enters into the composition of the telegram. Bayne.

A telegram from Napoleon to Eugénie announced that peace had been concluded. Illustrated News, July, 1859.

"A friend desires us to give notice that he will ask leave, at some convenient time, to introduce a new word into the vocabulary. It is telegram, instead of telegraphic despatch, or telegraphic communication. The word is formed according to the strictest laws of the language from which its root comes. Telegraph means to write from a distance; telegram, the writing itself, executed from a distance. Monogram, logogram, &c., are words formed on the same analogy, and in good acceptance." Albany Evening Journal, April 6, 1852.

TEL'E-GRĀPH (tēl'e-grāf), n. [Gr. tēle, afar off, and grāphō, to write; It. & Sp. telegrafo; Fr. télégraphe.] An instrument, or mechanical contrivance, for conveying intelligence to a greater distance than the sound of the voice can reach, and without the employment of a messenger; a semaphore. Mason.

The first idea of a telegraph, on the modern construction, was first suggested by Dr. Hooke in 1684. It was not till 1753 that the instrument was applied to useful purposes. Boydin.

Electric telegraph, or electro-magnetic telegraph, an instrument for the transmission of intelligence to a distance by means of electricity, or by means of electricity and magnetism. An electric telegraph consists of three essential parts: 1. The battery, or source of electrical power; 2. The wire, or channel along which that power is conveyed to the required distant point; 3. The instrument, by which the electricity gives its signals, or makes evident to the observer its presence or absence, its direction or degree of intensity of action. All instruments in practical use belong to one or other of the following classes: 1. Indicator telegraphs, or those in which the signals are given by the movements, in one or other direction, of a pointer or indicator; telegraphs of this class are those used generally throughout England; 2. Type-printing telegraphs, or those which are furnished with a mechanism for making an impression of the letters of the alphabet upon paper by means of printing types; 3. Symbol-printing telegraphs, or those in which a steel-point is made to impress a system of dots and lines upon paper; telegraphs of this kind are those in most general use in the United States; 4. Chemical-printing telegraphs, in which the current of electricity is employed to make colored marks on paper which has previously been chemically prepared. Tomlinson.

The "Defective Electro-magnetic Telegraph" was patented in England by Cooke and Wheatstone, June 12, 1837. The "American Electro-magnetic Telegraph" was patented in the U. S. by S. F. B. Morse, June 30, 1840, and first put in operation between Washington and Baltimore in 1844.

TEL'E-GRĀPH, v. a. [i. TELEGRAPHED; pp. TELEGRAPHING, TELEGRAPHED.] To announce or convey by a telegraph. Campbell.

We hope that, having carried his point against the Hellenists by the adoption of the word "telegram" [instead of "telegrams"], he will be no less resolute in his opposition to another party, who are striving to debase the language by the use of the word "tele" instead of the word "tel". Ed. Rev.

TEL'E-GRĀPH'IC, } a. [It. & Sp. telegrafico; TEL'E-GRĀPH'IC-AL, } Fr. télégraphique.] Pertaining to, or conveyed by, a telegraph. Qu. Rev.

"In its most extended sense, telegraphic communication includes the whole art of making signals whether by means of special machines, flags, lanterns, rockets, blue lights, beacon fires, &c., or by audible signals, such as are afforded by guns, trumpets, gongs, drums, &c." Tomlinson.

TEĒ-LĒG'RA-PHĪST, n. An operator of a telegraph. Clarke.

TEĒ-LĒG'RA-PHY, n. [It. telegrafia.] The science or the art of telegraphing.

The investigations of this office warrant other conclusions of much importance touching the future progress of submarine telegraphy. Lieut. Hawry.

TEĒ-LĒ-Q-LŌG'IC-AL, a. Relating to teleology, or the doctrine of final causes. Whewell.

TEĒ-LĒ-Q-LŌG'IC-AL-LY, ad. In a teleological manner. E. Everett.

TEĒ-LĒ-ŌL'Q-GY, n. [Gr. telos, the end, and lógos, a discourse.] The doctrine or general philosophical consideration of final causes. Hallam.

TEĒ-LĒ-Q-SĀUR, n. [Gr. tēleios, complete, perfect, and saurā, a lizard.] [Pal.] A fossil saurian reptile of the genus Teleosaurus. P. Cyc.

TEĒ-LĒ-Q-SĀU'RUS, n. [Pal.] A genus of fossil saurian reptiles of the crocodile kind. Baird.

TEL'E-PHŌNE, n. [Gr. tēle, afar off, and phōnō, to produce a sound.] An instrument for conveying sound to a great distance. Clarke.

TEL'E-PHŌN'IC, a. Pertaining to a telephone; conveying sound afar off. Clarke.

TĒL'E-SCŌPE, n. [Gr. τηλεσκόπος; τῆλε, afar off, and σκοπέω, to view; It. & Sp. telescopio; Fr. télescope.] An optical instrument for rendering distant objects more distinctly visible, by enlarging the images of them formed in the eye, and by increasing the brightness of those images.

Telescopes are of two classes—refracting telescopes or refractors, and reflecting telescopes or reflectors. The former consist of a combination of lenses; the latter of a concave speculum combined with a convex lens, and sometimes with a second reflecting surface. The light from the object viewed is received in the former by a convex lens, called the object-glass, which is usually made achromatic, and in the latter by a concave speculum; and in each case is so deviated as to form an inverted image of the object in or very near the focus. This image, or an image formed by the light being further deviated by reflection or refraction, is seen magnified, through a convex or a concave lens, or an achromatic combination of lenses, called the eye-piece. The object-glass and the object speculum are made large in order to collect a large quantity of light, so that the image formed may not become faint and indistinct when magnified.

The invention of the telescope has been ascribed to various persons. Sir David Brewster says, "We have no doubt that this invaluable instrument was invented by Roger Bacon or Baptista Porta in the form of experiment."

Achromatic telescope, a telescope free from chromatic aberration, or errors arising from the dispersion of light into its primary colors.—Aplanatic telescope, a telescope free from chromatic and spherical aberration.

Astronomical telescope, a reflecting telescope consisting of two convex lenses, an object-glass, A, having a long focal distance, and an eye-glass, C D, having a short focal distance. The inverted image, m n, formed by the object-glass, is seen by the eye at E, magnified, through the eye-glass, C D. The magnifying power is equal to the focal length of the object-glass divided by the focal length of the eye-glass.—Terrestrial telescope, a telescope differing from the astronomical telescope in being furnished with two additional eye-glasses to re-invert the image and thus make the object appear erect.—Galileo's telescope, a telescope constructed like the common opera glass, and consisting of a convex object-glass and a concave eye-glass. The rays refracted by the object-glass, which would form an inverted image, are made to proceed slightly divergent by a concave lens, and form an erect, magnified, virtual image seen by the eye.

Astronomical telescope

Newtonian telescope, a reflecting telescope which has a plane speculum, R, placed in the axis at the inclination of half a right angle, which intercepts the rays from the concave speculum, S, about to form an image, and deviates them into the focus of an eye-glass fixed in the side of the tube through which the image is seen, magnified, by the eye-glass. This plane speculum employed by Newton was a rectangular prism of glass which produces total reflection. See REFLECTOR.—Herschel's telescope, a reflecting telescope, constructed by Sir W. Herschel, in which the object speculum was a little inclined to the axis of the tube, so as to reflect the rays somewhat obliquely and form an image near the side of the tube, where a convex eye-glass was placed to magnify it. The observer sat with his back towards the object. The speculum was four feet in diameter, and collected so much light as to allow the application of a power of 6450 in examining the stars.—Gregorian telescope, a reflecting telescope in which the object speculum is perforated, and the inverted image formed by it is received nearly into the focus of a smaller concave speculum, which returns it erect to be viewed through the aperture, magnified by the eye-piece.—Cassagrainian telescope, a telescope differing from Gregory's only in having the small speculum convex instead of concave.—Lord Rosse's telescope, the largest and most powerful reflecting telescope ever constructed; the speculum being six feet in diameter, and the focal distance being fifty-three feet. The speculum is parabolic in form, and thus nearly free from spherical aberration. The rays, reflected by the object speculum, are deviated, as in Newton's telescope, by a rectangular glass prism, and form an image in the side of the tube, which is seen, magnified, through an eye-piece.—Equatorial telescope, or equatorial, a telescope so mounted as to have two axes of motion at right angles to each other; each axis carrying a graduated circle, and one of them being parallel to the axis of the earth. When it is fixed on a star, it may be clamped, and made to move uniformly by clockwork round that axis which is parallel to the earth's axis, and thus keep the star constantly in the field of view;—so called because it sweeps east or west in the heavens parallel to the equator. Young. Nichol. Brewster.

Newtonian telescope.

TĒL'E-SCŌPE-SHĒLL, n. (Conch.) A name given to a species of Turbo, with plane, striated, and numerous spires. Wright.

TĒL'E-SCŌP'IC, a. [It. & Sp. telescopic; TĒL'E-SCŌP'I-CAL, a. [Fr. télescopique.]

1. Pertaining to a telescope. Wollaston.

2. Visible, or visible only, through a telescope. "Telescopical sights." Ward.

3. Far-seeing; seeing at a distance.

Aristotle had the eye of a bird, both telescopic and microscopic. Whately.

TĒL'E-SCŌP'I-CAL-LY, ad. By use of a telescope. Allen.

TĒ-LĒ'SI-A (tē-lē'shē-ā), n. [Fr. télesie.] (Min.) Sapphire. Ure.

† TĒL'ĒSM, n. [Arab. talism.] An amulet or magical charm; a talisman. Gregory.

TĒL'ĒS-MĀT'IC, a. Of, or pertaining to, TĒL'ĒS-MĀT'I-CAL, a. esms; talismanic. Gregory.

TĒ-LĒS'TIC, a. [Gr. τελεστικός, fit for finishing; τελέω, to finish.] That can or may end or finish. The telesic or mystic operation. Cudworth.

TĒ-LĒS'TICH, n. [Gr. τίλος, the end, and στίχος, a verse.] A poem, or kind of anagram, in which the final letters of the lines, taken collectively, make up a name. B. Jonson.

TĒL'IC, a. [Gr. τελικός; τέλος, the end.] Relating to the end or purpose. [R.] Prof. Stuart.

TĒLL, v. a. [A. S. tellan, to tell; Dut. vertellen; Frs. tella; Ger. zählen; Dan. tale, to speak; telle, to tell; Sw. tälja, to tell, or count; firtälja, to tell, or relate; Icel. tala, to speak.] [2. TOLD; pp. TELLING, TOLD.]

1. To make known by words; to express verbally; to utter; to communicate orally. Who does not know this and another tell, My tale is true, and I am not a liar. Pope.

2. To recount; to relate; to rehearse. I will declare what wise men have told from their fathers, and have not hid. Job xv. 18.

3. To inform; to teach; to make known to. Tell me how may I know him, how adore. Milton.

4. To discover; to divulge; to disclose; to confess; to acknowledge; to own. She never told her love; But let concealment, like a worm i' the bud, Feed on her darkness till it breed. Shak.

5. To reckon; to number; to count. Look now towards heaven, and tell the stars, if thou be able to number them. Gen. xv. 5.

6. To discern; to distinguish; as, "I could not tell them apart." [Colloquial.]

7. To make excuses to. [Inelegant and R.] Tush! never tell me; I take it much unkindly. Shak.

To tell off, to count off; to detach; to distribute. Syn.—To tell, disclose, reveal, and divulge, all signify to make known what was before unknown. Tell the news, discover what was unknown; disclose what was concealed; reveal a secret, and divulge it publicly. Other words; express opinions or sentiments; tell or relate a story; tell or inform an individual; speak a language; rehearse a tragedy; teach a pupil; communicate knowledge; impart information. —See DELIVER, DISCLOSE.

TĒLL, v. n. 1. To give account; to make report. Who answered him full soft, he could not tell. Spenser.

2. To take or have effect; to be effective. "Every line tells." [Colloquial.] Qu. Rev.

TĒLL'A-BLE, a. That may be told. Athenæum.

TĒLL'ER, n. 1. One who tells; one who relates, recounts, or reports; a narrator. Shak.

2. One who numbers; a counter. Johnson.

3. One of four officers of the English exchequer, whose business it is to pay and receive all moneys on the king's account. Couvill.

4. An officer of a bank who receives or pays money; as, "A paying or a receiving teller."

5. In the last two senses the word is said to take its meaning from taller, one who kept a tally, as it is his duty to make the accounts tally. Bouvier.

5. A person appointed to receive and count votes at an election; a scrutineer. Bowdler.

TĒLL'ER-SHĪP, n. The office or the business of a teller. Clarke.

TĒL-LĪ'NA, n. [Gr. τελλίνα, a kind of shell-fish.] (Zool.) A genus of bivalves having very long siphons, and shells which present the appearance of an irregular fold. Woodward.

TĒLL'ING, n. The act of relating. Udal.

TĒLL'ING, p. a. Having great effect; effective. "A telling speech." Ch. O'b.

TĒLL'TALE, n. 1. One who gives malicious or officious information; a talebearer; a tattler. What! shall these papers be like tell-tales here? Shak.

2. A dial or index at the stern of a vessel to indicate the position of the helm. Mar. Dict.

3. A piece of lead or ivory, connected by a cord with the bellows of an organ, which indicates, by rising and falling, in what degree the wind is exhausted. Moore.

4. (Mech.) A piece of mechanism attached to a steam-engine to indicate the tension of steam:—a contrivance for showing the amount of work done by a machine, the number of times a gate or other place has been opened, &c., and, also, to check the conduct of persons employed, as of watchmen, check-takers, &c. Davis.

TĒLL'TALE, a. Telling tales; giving malicious or officious information. Shak.

TĒL'LU-RAL, a. [L. tellus, telluris, the earth.] Belonging to the earth; terrene. [R.] Clarke.

TĒL'LU-RATE, n. (Chem.) A saline compound of telluric acid and a base. Miller.

TĒL'LU-RĒT-TĒD, a. Combined with tellurium. Telluretted hydrogen, a gaseous compound of tellurium and hydrogen, analogous in constitution and properties to sulphuretted hydrogen. It has weak acid properties, and precipitates most metals from their solutions in the form of tellurides;—called also hydrotelluric acid. Graham.

TĒL-LŪ'RĪ-AN, n. [L. tellus, telluris, the earth.] A machine for illustrating the effect of the earth's motion, and the obliquity of her axis in causing the vicissitudes of day and night, and the changes of the seasons. Ed. Ency.

TĒL-LŪ'RĪ-BĪS'MUTH, n. (Min.) A somewhat sectile, pale, steel-gray mineral, sometimes occurring in crystals, and consisting essentially of tellurium and bismuth;—called also utradymite, and bornite. Dana.

TĒL-LŪ'RĪC (122), a. [L. tellus, telluris.]

1. Belonging to the earth; terrestrial. Ed. Rev.

2. (Chem.) Noting a crystallizable acid of a nauseous metallic taste, with a feeble affinity for bases, and composed of three equivalents of oxygen and one of tellurium. Miller.

Telluric ochre, (Min.) See TELLURITE.

TĒL-LŪ'RĪC-SĪL'VĒR, n. (Min.) A slightly malleable mineral, of metallic lustre, occurring granular, and in coarse-grained masses, and consisting of tellurium and silver;—called also bi-telluret of silver, and hessite. Dana.

TĒL'LU-RĪDE, n. (Chem.) A compound of tellurium and a metal or other equivalent body; as, "Telluride of sodium." Graham.

TĒL'LU-RĪNE, n. A kind of French tripoli for polishing metal, cleaning marbles, &c. Simmonds.

TĒL'LU-RĪTE, n. 1. (Min.) A mineral occurring with tellurium in small, yellowish or whitish spherical masses, with a radiated structure;—called also telluric ochre. Dana.

2. (Chem.) A compound of tellurous acid and a salifiable base. Graham.

TĒL-LŪ'RĪ-ŪM, n. [L. tellus, the earth.] (Min.) A rare, silver-white substance, classed, by most English writers, among metals, and found chiefly in the mines of Transylvania and Hungary, occasionally native and pure, but generally combined with various metals. It bears a close analogy to sulphur and selenium, and is classed with them by some writers. Miller.

Tellurum is a poor conductor of heat and electricity, brittle, crystallizable, is distillable at a high temperature, burns, when highly heated in the air, with a lively blue flame, and diffuses a dense white smoke. It is more than six times as heavy as water. Miller. Graham.

Graphic tellurum, a very sectile mineral, sometimes crystalline, sometimes massive, of a metallic lustre, and consisting essentially of tellurium, gold, and silver;—so called in allusion to its crystals being arranged like writing characters. It is a valuable ore of gold. Dana.—Tellurium salts, (Chem.) a group of salts, composed of two tellurides, analogous to sulphur-salts, in which tellurium performs the same function as oxygen in oxy-salts;—called also telluri-salts. Miller.

TĒL-LŪ'RĪ-ŪM-GLANCE, n. (Min.) An opaque, sectile, blackish, lead-gray mineral, sometimes crystallized, generally foliated, of a splendid lustre, and consisting of tellurium, sulphur, lead, and gold;—called also black tellurium, foliated tellurium, bi-telluret of lead, and nagyagite. Dana.

TĒL-LU-ROŪS, a. (Chem.) Noting an acid composed of two equivalents of oxygen and one of tellurium. It has a bitter, metallic taste, and combines with alkalis. Miller.

TĒL'O-TYPE, n. [Gr. τύπος, afar off, and τύπος, the mark of a blow, an impress.] A printing, electric telegraph. Simmonds.

TE'LUM, n. [L., a weapon, a dart.] The thirteenth or last segment of insects. Maunder.

TEMEN, n. A measure for grain of Tripoli, containing nearly six gallons. Simmonds.

TĒM-ĒR-Ā-RĪ-OŪS, a. [L. temerarius; It. & Sp. temerario; Fr. teméraire.—Perhaps from the same root as L. temno, to slight. Wm. Smith.]

1. Unduly regardless of danger; unreasonably adventurous; foolhardy; rash. L'Estrange.
2. Wanting in forethought; thoughtless; inconsiderate; careless; heedless. [R.] Ray.

†TĒM-ĒR-Ā-TĪON, n. Temerity. Bp. Taylor.

TE-MĒR-I-TY, n. [L. temeritas; temere, by chance, rashly; It. temerità; Sp. temeridad; Fr. temérité.] Excessive or undue boldness; unreasonable contempt of danger; rashness; foolhardiness; precipitancy.

It is notorious temerity to pass sentence upon grounds incapable of evidence. Burn out.

Syn.—See RASHNESS.

†TĒM-Ē-ROŪS, a. Rash. Uncertain Authors.

TEMIN, n. A money of account in Algiers, equal to about forty cents. Ed. Ency.

TĒM-PĒ'AN, a. (Geog.) Relating to, or like, Tempe, a valley in Thessaly; delightful. Clarke.

TĒM-PĒR, v. a. [L. tempero; tempus, time (Gr. τέμνω, to cut off); It. temperare; Sp. temperar; Fr. tempérer.] [2. TEMPERED; pp. TEMPERING, TEMPERED.]

1. To mix in due proportion; to mix so that one part qualifies the other; to qualify.

I shall temper so
Justice with mercy as will make the most Tolerable use of all the law's violence. Milton.

2. To form by mixing; to compound.

The queen, sir, very oft importuned me
To temper poisons for her. Shak.

3. To accommodate; to adapt; to suit; to fit. God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb. Sterne.

4. To moderate; to restrain; to mollify; to assuage; to appease; to pacify; to soothe.

With this she wants to temper angry Jove. Spenser.

5. To bring to a proper consistence. And temper clay with blood of Englishmen. Shak.

6. To bring to a proper degree of hardness or elasticity, as a metal, by thrusting it when hot into cold water. Boyle.

7. (Mus.) To modify or equalize, as the tones of an instrument, so as to distribute the imperfections as uniformly as possible among the different intervals.—See TEMPERAMENT.

8. †To rule; to govern; to manage. Spenser.

Syn.—See QUALIFY.

†TĒM-PĒR, v. n. To accord; to agree. Few men rightly temper with the stars. Shak.

TĒM-PĒR, n. 1. Due mixture of different qualities or components; state of being tempered.

Health itself is but a kind of temper, gotten and preserved by a convenient mixture of contraries. Arbutnot.

2. Constitution or natural condition of body; temperament. Burnet.

3. Constitutional frame of mind; mental disposition or constitution; humor.

Remember with what mild
And gracious temper he both heard and judged. Milton.
From nature he [Johnson] had received an uncouth figure, a diseased constitution, and an irritable temper. Macaulay.

4. Calmness of mind; moderation; equanimity; tranquillity; composure.

Teach me, like thee, in various nature wise,
To fall with dignity, with temper rise. Pope.

5. Middle course; mean or medium.

The present clergy's wishes reach no further than that some reasonable temper had been used, instead of paring them so quick. Swift.

6. State to which metals, particularly steel, are reduced, in respect to hardness or elasticity.

These needles should have a due temper. Sharp.

7. Passion; anger; irritation.

8. This sense does not appear to be authorized by the English lexicographers, except some of the recent ones, as Smart, Craig, &c. But the word is often used in this sense in the United States, and sometimes in England, as in the following passage: "This admission favors the editor's opinion that Johnson, when the first ebullition of temper had subsided, felt that he had been unreasonably violent."—John W. Croker.

8. An alkaline substance, as lime in the West Indies, or wood-ashes in Brazil, used in making sugar, for the purpose of clarifying the cane-juice. Simmonds.

TÉN, a. [M. Goth. taihan; A. S. tyn, ten; Frs. tian; Dut. tiën; Old Ger. zehun, zín; Ger. zehn; Dan. tí; Sw. tio; Icel. tin.—Gr. δέκα; L. decem; It. dieci; Sp. diez; Fr. dix.—The origin of Ger. zehn, zehn, L. decem, is best explained by the Old Ger. and M. Goth. tai hund or hend; that is, the old article thai, the, and hund, hend, hands, both the hands or ten fingers, by which they numbered or counted, as children still do. Jukel.—Tooke thinks it is the past participle of A. S. týman, to enclose, to encompass. He observes, "It is in the highest degree probable that all numeration was originally performed by the fingers, the usual resort of the ignorant, for the number of the fingers is still the utmost extent of numeration. The hands doubled, closed, shut in, include and conclude all number, and might therefore well be denominated tyn or ten." Nine and one; twice five.

10. Ten is a proverbial number, used indefinitely for a great many; as, "Ten times the gift." Dryden.

|| TÉN'A-BLE (tēn'a-bl, W. P. J. E. F. K. Sm. R. Wb.; tēn-a-bl, S. Ja. Nares), a. [Fr. tenable; tenir (L. teneo), to hold.] That may be held, maintained, or defended; defensible.

The town was strong of itself, and wanted no industry to fortify and make it tenable. Bacon.

3. "The quantity of e, in the first syllable of this word, and its relatives tenet, tenor, and tenure, is one of the most puzzling difficulties of pronunciation. How differently this letter is pronounced by different speakers, may be gathered from a view of those orthoepists who have marked the quantity of the vowels:—

Sheridan	tēn'a-ble	tēn'et	tēn'or	tēn'ure
Kenrick	tēn'a-ble	tēn'et	tēn'or	tēn'ure
Nares	tēn'a-ble	tēn'et	tēn'or	tēn'ure
Ash	tēn'a-ble	tēn'et	tēn'or	tēn'ure
Scott	tēn'a-ble	tēn'et	tēn'or	tēn'ure
Entick	tēn'a-ble	tēn'et	tēn'or	tēn'ure
Perry	tēn'a-ble	tēn'et	tēn'or	tēn'ure
W. Johnston	tēn'a-ble	tēn'et	tēn'or	tēn'ure
Buchanan	tēn'a-ble	tēn'et	tēn'or	tēn'ure
Fry	tēn'a-ble	tēn'et	tēn'or	tēn'ure
Smith	—	tēn'et	—	—
Elphinstone	—	—	tēn'or	—

"From this survey of our dictionaries, we find them uniform only in the word tenor. They are nearly equally divided on the word tenet; and, if similitude were to decide, it would be clearly in favor of the short vowel, in this word as well as in tenor. They are both Latin words, and both have the vowel short in the original. This, however, is no reason, with those who understand the analogy of English pronunciation, (for tremor, minor, &c., have the first vowel short in Latin,) but it sufficiently shows the partiality of the ear to the short vowel in words of this form, as is evident in the word tenant." Walker.

The following table exhibits a view of the pronunciation of tenable, tenet, and tenure, by the principal English orthoepists subsequent to Walker:—

1. To try by a test or standard; to prove or to disprove by experiment, or some criterion; to subject to a critical trial.

Not with fond shekels of the tested gold. Shak.
The power of a sample of gunpowder, or of a piece of ordnance, is tested, not by the loudness of the report, but by the depth of the impression made on the target. W. Harvey.

2. To attest and date. [R.] Wright.

3. To refine, as gold and silver, by means of litharge, or oxide of lead, cleansing or separating them from alloy; to assay. Craig.

4. (Chem.) To try or examine by applying a reagent or reagents. Dr. C. T. Jackson.

Though Shakespeare uses tested as a participial adjective, yet the active verb to test is modern. It is reputed to be of American origin, and the use of it has heretofore been stigmatized. It has, however, been often used, within a few years, in the most distinguished English reviews and journals, and by some of the most eminent English writers.

†TÈST, v. n. To make a will or testament.

While he that testeth liveth. Heb. ix. 17, Rheims Version.

Testaceous powders, (Med.) powders consisting of burnt shells. Dunglison.

TÈST-ÁCT, n. The act of 25 Charles II., c. 2, by which all officers, civil and military, were bound to take the oaths of supremacy and abjuration, and the test, that is, the eucharist according to the forms of the Church of England, under severe penalties if they exercised the functions of any such officer without being thus duly qualified. This act was repealed in 1828. Blackstone. Eden.

TÈS'TA-CY, n. The state or condition of dying; after having made a will which was valid at the time of testator's death. Bouvier.

TÈS'TA-MÈNT, n. [L. testamentum; testor, to testify; It. & Sp. testamento; Fr. testament.]

1. A formal, legal declaration or expression of a person's will or desire in regard to the disposition he would have made of his property after his death; a will. Blackstone. Burrill.

A testament has been distinguished from a will, both by common lawyers and civilians, but on different grounds. In modern law the terms will and testament are generally used without distinction, to express the instrument by which a person makes a disposition of property, to take effect after death. Where the instrument is more formally described, both terms are made use of, and it is called a last will and testament. Burrill.

2. The title or appellation of each of the two parts of the Bible, including the canonical books of the sacred Scriptures; as, “The Old Testament”; “The New Testament.” Hook. Eden.

It is not out of any satiety that I change from the Old Testament to the New; these two, as they are the breasts of the church, so they yield milk equally wholesome, equally pleasant, and equally nourishing. Bp. Hall.

Optatus compares the Scriptures to the testator's will, if there be a correspondence among the descendants of the house, then to the second testament, the Gospels are called the New Testament, the Acts of the Apostles, and the Epistles, the Old Testament, and the Gospels, the New Testament. Eden. Hook.

The word rendered Testament is generally, by itself, translated Covenant. The term New is added to distinguish it from the Old Covenant, or dispensation of Moses. These two terms, from signifying the two dispensations, came soon to denote the books wherein they were written; the sacred writings of the Jews being called the Old Testament, and the writings superadded by the evangelists and the apostles, the New Testament. See 2 Cor. iii. 6. 14. The title New Testament was adopted in the second century. Eden. Hook.

A civil testament, a testament made according to the forms of the civil law, in contradistinction to a military testament, in which some of the forms may be dispensed with.—A common testament, a testament made jointly by several persons.—A mystic testament, a form of making a will which consists principally in enclosing it in an envelope, and sealing it in the presence of witnesses;—also called a solemn testament, because it requires more formality than a nuncupative testament.—A nuncupative testament, a testament made verbally, in the presence of witnesses.—An olographic testament, a testament written wholly by the testator himself. Bouvier.

“When the Romans first heard the name of the Teutones, they thought that they were a single tribe. They did not know that it was also the general and ethnographic name of all those nations to which they afterwards gave the vague designation of Germans.” P. Cyc.—See TEUTONIC.

TEU-TŌN'IC (tu-tōn'ik), a. [L. Teutonicus; It. Teutonico; Fr. Teutonique.] Pertaining to, or derived from, the Teutones, or their language.

Our language, for almost a century, has, by the concurrence of many causes, been gradually departing from its original Teutonic character, and deviating towards a Gallic character. Johnson.

The watch, the gun, and the art of printing, are Teutonic inventions. P. Cyc.

“The Teutonic race, originally from Asia, are divided into three branches. The first branch contains the High Germans, to whom belong the Teutonic inhabitants of Upper and Middle Germany, those of Switzerland, and the greater part of the Germans of Hungary; it is subdivided into the Saxon and the Franconian minor branches. The second is the Saxon branch, which is divided into three minor branches, the first of which contains the Friesians; the second, the Old Saxons, or Low Germans, with the Dutch, the Flemings, and the Saxons of Transylvania; and the third, the English, the Scotch, and the greater part of the inhabitants of the United States. The third branch is the Scandinavian, to which belong the Icelanders, the Norwegians, the Danes, and the Swedes.—Teuton is identical with Deutsche or Teutsche, (in Low German Deutch, in Dutch Duitsch, in Danish Tydsch, in English Dutch), which from the remotest time has been, and is still, the general name of that part of the Teutonic nations which we now call Germans, who considered the god or hero Tuaso, as their common ancestor. P. Cyc.

Teutonic order, or Teutonic knights, a religious order of knighthood originally founded in Palestine by some Teutones or Germans, who associated themselves for the purpose of affording relief to sick and infirm pilgrims. It was incorporated by Pope Celestine III., in 1191, and endowed with very important privileges. When the Christians were expelled from the Holy Land, a papal bull was issued (1226) empowering the Teutonic knights to conquer lands for themselves from the pagans of Prussia and Poland. They treated those whom they conquered with such barbarity that the princes of Germany combined against them, and the order sunk gradually into ruin. Eden.

1. A Syrian deity for whom the Hebrew idolatresses were accustomed to hold an annual feast or lamentation, commencing with the new moon of July;—same as the Phœnician Adon, or Adonis. Ezek. viii. 14. Kitto.

2. The tenth month of the Jewish civil year, answering to part of June and July, and including twenty-nine days. Brande.

THAM-NÓPH-I-LÍ' N.É., n. pl. [Gr. θάμνος, a bush, and φίλος, a friend.] (Ornith.) A subfamily of passerine, denti-rostral birds, of the family Laniidae; bush-shrikes. Gray.

THAN, conj. [Goth. than; A. S. thonne, thanne; Dut. dan; Ger. denn.] A particle used in comparison. It follows an adjective or adverb in the comparative degree, to connect the things compared:—it also follows other, and sometimes otherwise, rather, and else.—See THEN.

He [Solomon] was wiser than all men. 1 Kings iv. 31.
I love you for nothing more than for the just esteem you have for all the sons of Adam. Swift.

THAN, prep. In comparison with.

Beelzebub, than whom, Satan except, none higher sat. Milton.
You are a much greater loser than me. Swift.
A stone is heavy, and the sand weighty; but a fool's wrath is heavier than them both. Prov. xxvii. 3.
You are a girl as much brighter than her as he was a poet sublimer than me. Prior.

“No one of these expressions is correct; or, if so, they are correct only under the idea that the word than is sometimes a conjunction (when it cannot govern a case), and sometimes a preposition (when it can govern a case).” Latham.

“Than is used not only as a conjunction, but as a preposition, and as such affects cases; thus, ‘He is wiser than me’ is good English. So also is ‘He is wiser than I,’ i. e. than I am. In the first instance, than is a preposition; in the second, it is a conjunction.” Dr. Charles Richardson.

Thamnophylus meleagris.

“Than is not now often used as a preposition except before whom.”

THÁN'A-TÖID, a. [Gr. θάνατος, death, and εἶδος, form, figure.] Resembling death; apparently dead. Dunglison.

THÁN'A-TÖL'O-GY, n. [Gr. θάνατος, death, and λόγος, a discourse.] A description, or the doctrine, of death. Dunglison.

THÁN'A-TÖP'SIS, n. [Gr. θάνατος, death, and ὄψις, a view.] A view or contemplation of death. W. C. Bryant.

THANE, n. [A. S. thegen, thegn, then; thegnian, thengian, to serve; Old Ger. degen, a servant, a soldier; Icel. thegn.] A title of honor among the Anglo-Saxons. Shak.

The exact meaning of the term thane is involved in considerable obscurity; the rank or dignity which it denoted was possibly not the same at different times, and there were also thanes of more than one kind. After the conquest thanes are frequently classed with barons, and in the laws of Henry I. the two words are apparently used as synonymous. One of the few things that are tolerably certain with regard to the rank of a thane is, that it implied the possession of a certain amount of landed property. P. Cyc.

The king's thanes were Anglo-Saxon noblemen, inferior in rank to earls, and were afterwards denominated barons. Bosworth.

THANE'DOM, n. The dominion, office, or property of a thane. Sir W. Scott.

THANE'-LANDS, n. pl. Lands granted by charters of the Saxon kings to their thanes. Cowell.

THANE'SHIP, n. The state, office, dignity, or seignior of a thane. Steevens.

THANK (thangk, 82), v. a. [A. S. thancian; Dut. & Ger. denken; Dan. tanke; Sw. tacka.—From Goth. thagjan, A. S. thencan, to think, to remember. Junius.] [z. THANKED; pp. THANKING, THANKED.] To express gratitude, or make acknowledgments to, for any favor.

We are bound to thank God always. 2 Thess. i. 3.
I thank you for your pains. Shak.

It is often used ironically. “Thank yourself, if aught should fall amiss.” Dryden.

THANK, n.; pl. THANKS. [M. Goth. thanks; A. S. thanc, thanc; Dut. dank; Frs. thonc; Old Ger. danch, thanc, thank; Ger. dank; Dan. tak; Sw. tack; Icel. thackir.—Ir. Gael. taing.] Expression of gratitude; acknowledgment for favor or kindness;—commonly used in the plural. “This kindness merits thanks.” Shak.

If ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? for sinners also do even the same. Luke vi. 32.
Giving thanks always for all things unto God. Eph. v. 20.
For this, to the infinitely Good we owe immortal thanks. Milton.

† In thank, thankfully; gratefully. Chaucer.

THANK'FUL, a. [A. S. thancfull.] Having, or impressed with, gratitude; grateful.

Be thankful unto him, and bless his name. Ps. c. 3.

THANK'FUL-NESS, n. The state of being thankful; gratitude. Sidney.

Syn.—Gratitude is rather the feeling; thankfulness, the expression of the feeling. Thankfulness is shown especially by words; gratitude, by actions. Thankfulness is the beginning of gratitude; gratitude, the completion of thankfulness. It is common to use the term grateful with reference to a favor from a human benefactor, and thankful with reference to the goodness of Providence. It is more common to apply to the disposition the term grateful than thankful.

THANK'LESS, a. 1. Ungrateful; unthankful.

How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is To have a thankless child! Shak.

2. Not deserving thanks, or unlikely to obtain thanks. “A thankless office.” Wotton.

THANK'LESS-LY, ad. Unthankfully; with ingratitude; ungratefully. Clarke.

THANK'LESS-NESS, n. The state of being thankless; ingratitude. Donne.

THANK'-OF-FER-ING, n. An offering in acknowledgment of favors or mercy. Watts.

† THANKS'GIVE, v. a. To celebrate or consecrate by solemn rites. Mede.

THANKS'GIV-ER, n. A giver of thanks. Barrow.

THANKS'GIV-ING [thānks'gīv-ing, S. W. P. F. Ja. Sm. R. C.; that' - giv-ing, K. Wb.], n.

1. The act of giving thanks, or expressing gratitude for favors or mercy received.

Sing unto the Lord with thanksgiving. Ps. cxviii. 7.
Every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving. 1 Tim. iv. 4.

2. The part of divine service in which thanks are offered for benefits received. Eden.

3. A day set apart for public acknowledgment of benefits and mercies received from God. Washington.

THANK'-WOR-THI-NĒSS (-wūr-thē-), n. The state of being thankworthy. Clarke.

THANK'WOR-THY (-wūr-thē), a. Deserving thanks or gratitude; meritorious. 1 Pet. ii. 19.

THĀR, n. [Zool.] A ruminant mammal of the family Antilopeæ, or antelopes, inhabiting the central region of Nepal; Capricornis bubalina; — called also imo and serow. Eng. Cyc.

THĀRM, n. [A. S. thearm, an intestine.] Intestines twisted into a cord; twisted gut. Ascham.

THĀT, pron. demonstrative, or adj. pronominal; pl. THĀŌSE. [Goth. thata, thatei; A. S. that, that; Dut. dat; Ger. das; Dan. & Sw. det. — Russ. da.] Not this, but the other; the former thing; the more distant thing; — designating or specifying some person or thing spoken of or alluded to before; — often used emphatically, and opposed to this. — See THIS.

I say unto you, that it shall be more tolerable, in that day, for Sodom, than for that city. Luke x. 12.
By religion is meant a living up to those principles; that is, to act conformably to our best reason. Tillotson.

In this scale gold, in t'other flame, doth lie;
The weight of that mounts this so high. Cowley.

If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this or that. Jas. iv. 15.
In that, because. "In that he liveth, he liveth unto God." Rom. vi. 10. — "Things are preached, not in that they are taught, but in that they are published." Hooker. — And that, an expression noting exaggeration. "Ye do wrong, and defraud, and that your brethren." 1 Cor. vi. 8.

When that is used as a demonstrative pronoun or pronominal adjective, it is pronounced with the distinct sound of short a, rhyming with hat, mat; but when it is used as a relative pronoun or conjunction, it is but slightly pronounced, never having the emphasis placed on it; and the sound of a is obscurely uttered, not differing much from the obscure sound of u.

THĀT, pron. relative. Equivalent to who, whom, or which, relating to the antecedent person or thing; used in the singular and plural numbers, and in the nominative and objective cases; — commonly applied to things, but often to persons.

It was formerly sometimes used for what, or that which; as, "We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen." John iii. 11.

"That," says Bishop Lowth, "is used indifferently both of persons and things, but perhaps it would be more properly confined to the latter." But there are cases in which that is properly used when applied to persons, instead of who: 1st. When it follows the interrogative who, or an adjective in the superlative degree; as, "Who that has any sense of right would reason thus?" "He was the oldest person that I saw." 2d. When it follows the pronominal adjective same; as, "He was the same man that I saw before." 3d. When persons make but a part of the antecedent; as, "The man and things that he mentioned." 4th. After an antecedent introduced by the expletive it; as, "It was I, not he, that did it."

Steele, in the Spectator, No. 86, in order to ridicule the too frequent use of that, gives the following passage: "My lords, with humble submission, that that I say, is this: that that that that gentleman has advanced is not that that he should have proved to your lordships." In this sentence that indistinctly pronounced (that) is once used as a conjunction, and three times as a relative pronoun; and when distinctly pronounced (that), it is a demonstrative pronoun.

THĀT, conj. 1. Because; — noting a reason.

If then that friend demand, why Brutus rose against Caesar, this is my answer, Not that I loved Caesar less, but that I loved Rome more. Shak.

2. Noting object, or final end or purpose; in order that; to the effect that.

Do all things without murmurings and disputings, that ye may be blameless and harmless. Phil. ii. 14, 15.

Treat it kindly, that it may Wish at least with us to stay. Cowley.

3. Noting a result or consequence. Dryden.

The custom and familiarity of these tongues do sometimes so far influence the expressions in these epistles, that one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugation. Locke.

4. Noting indication; as, "He heard that his friend was sick."

To believe that when they died they went immediately to the stars. Heylin.

According to Hoine Tooke, that as a conjunction is the same as that the pronoun, and this may be shown by a resolution of the construction: as, "I wish you to believe that I would not wilfully hurt a fly"; i. e. "I would not wilfully hurt a fly; I wish you to believe that."

THĀTCH, n. [A. S. thac, thac, theac; theccan, to cover, to thatch; Dut. dak; Old Ger. tach, thak; Ger. dach; Dan. tag, tekke; Sw. tak. — Ir. Gael. tubh, tugh. — Gr. rēyo, stēyo, a roof, a covering; L. tectum; It. tetto; Sp. techo, a roof, a ceiling; Fr. toit. — Gr. oteyo, to cover.] Dried grass, straw, rushes, reeds, palm-leaves, or other vegetable material, forming or covering a roof. "A roof of thatch." Pope.

THĀTCH, v. a. [i. THATCHED; pp. THATCHING, THATCHED.] To cover with thatch. Knob.

THĀTCHED (thācht or thāch'ed), p. a. Covered with thatch. "Thatched roofs." Brande.

THĀTCH'ING, n. 1. The act or the art of covering houses, barns, &c., with thatch. P. Cyc.

2. A roof, or part of a roof, made of thatch; a covering of thatch. Smart.

3. Materials used for thatching. Brande.

THĀUGHT, n. (Naut.) A thwart. — See THWART.

THĀU'MA-TRŌPE, n. [Gr. θαύμα, a wonder, a marvel, and τροπή, to turn.] An optical toy, illustrating the persistence of impressions made on the retina of the eye.

The thaumatrope consists of a circular card having two parts or halves of a picture, one on each side, and two strings fixed at opposite points of the periphery, by twisting which it may be twirled round with considerable velocity. When this is done, the impression made on the retina by each of the two halves of the picture is renewed before it is effaced, and they apparently unite and form one whole picture. An impression on the retina lasts about one seventh of a second. Lib. of Useful Knowledge.

THĀU-MA-TŪR'GIC, a. Working wonders; THĀU-MA-TŪR'GIC-AL, a. exciting wonder; wonderful. Burton.

THĀU-MA-TŪR'GIST, n. A performer or worker of wonders or miracles. Knapp.

THĀU-MA-TŪR'GUS, n. [Low L., from Gr. θαυματουργός, a juggler; Fr. thaumaturge.] A worker of wonders or miracles; — a title given by the Roman Catholics to certain of their saints. Buchanan.

THĀU-MA-TŪR-GY, n. [Gr. θαυματουργία; θαύμα, a wonder, and εργον, work.] The act or the art of performing wonders or miracles. Warton.

THĀW, v. n. [A. S. thawan; Dut. dooijen; Ger. thawen; Dan. tve; Sw. tva. — The same word as deu, A. S. deocean, to bedew. Richardson. — See DEW.] [i. THAWED; pp. THAWING, THAWED.]

1. To dissolve or become fluid from a state of congelation, as ice or snow; to melt; to liquefy.

Having let the ice thaw of itself, and frozen the liquor a second time, we could not discern any thing. Boyle.

2. To become so warm as to melt ice and snow, as the weather. Johnson.

THĀW, v. a. To cause to melt or dissolve from a state of congelation; to dissolve, as ice or snow. "To thaw the frozen seas." Drayton.

THĀW, n. 1. Liquefaction by warmth of any thing congealed. Shak.

Harden his stubborn heart, but still as ice
More hardened after thaw. Milton.

2. Warmth or weather such as liquefies or melts any thing congealed. Wilkins.

They soon after, with great joy, saw the snow fall in large flakes from the trees — a certain sign of an approaching thaw. Cook.

THĀW'Y, a. Growing liquid after congelation; thawing; melting. Fisher Ames.

THE (thē or the), the definite article. [Goth. tho; A. S. the; Dut. de; Old Ger. der, ther, this; Ger. der, die, das; Dan. den, det; Sw. den. — The imperative of A. S. thegan, thēan, to take. Richardson.] A word prefixed to nouns both in the singular and the plural number to indicate what particular thing or things are meant; as, "Give me the book"; "Drink the water"; "See the soldiers."

And Nathan said to David, Thou art the man. 2 Sam. xli. 7.

It is often used before adjectives and adverbs in the comparative and superlative degrees, and before a part of a sentence, in order to give to several words, collectively taken, the unity and construction of a single noun substantive. "The longer sin hath kept possession of the heart, the harder it will be to drive it out." Whole Duty of Man. — Before a word beginning with a vowel, e is very often cut off in verse; as, —

"But, of the two, less dangerous is th' offence."

Of this practice, Todd says, "It is a barbarous custom, now rarely observed."

† THĒ, v. n. To thrive. — See THEE. Old Play.

THĒ'A, n. (Bot.) A genus of plants, the dried leaves of which constitute the tea of commerce; tea-plant. — See TEA. Baird.

THĒ'A-TRE (thē'a-tur), n. [Gr. θέατρον; θεαίναι, to see; L. theatrum; It. & Sp. teatro; Fr. théâtre.]

1. A place or edifice for dramatic representations or performances; a play-house. Milton.

The first theatre of stone at Athens, called the Theatre of Bacchus, was built in the time of Themistocles. Brande.

"It should be borne in mind that theatres are mentioned in several parts of Greece where the worship of Dionysus, and the drama connected with it did not exist, so that these buildings were devoted to other public exhibitions. Thus, at Athens there were in later times, besides the theatre in Lenæa, two others which were not destined for dramatic performances, but were only places in which the sophists held their declamations." W. Smith.

2. A place of action or exhibition; scene; seat. "The theatre of war." Stocquer.

3. A room in medical institutions with seats rising one above another, and a table in the centre, for the exhibition of surgical operations, dissections, &c. Warfield.

THE-ÔD'I-CY, n. [Fr. théodicée, from Gr. θεός, God, and δίκη, right, justice; Low L. theodicaea.]

1. A vindication of the ways of God or of providence:—optimism. Leibnitz. Fisher.

2. That part of philosophy which treats of the being, perfections, and government, of God, and the immortality of the soul. Fleming.

THE-ÔD'Q-LITE, n. [Etymology uncertain.—

Perhaps from Gr. θεοδωκεῖν, to see, and ὄψις, visible; or θεάω, sight, and ὄψις, to make visible.] (Surveying.) An instrument for measuring angles in vertical and horizontal planes. Tomlinson.

In the figure, A B is a small telescope, which is made to turn vertically around the centre C. Attached to the frame which supports the telescope on the lower part is the segment of a circle, D E, divided into degrees. Upon raising or depressing the end, A, of the telescope, this graduated arc is also moved from the zero point F, where it is fixed when the telescope is horizontal, and the angle of elevation or of depression may be read from the arc. For the purpose of taking horizontal angles, the instrument has also a horizontal motion upon its axis. At C H are two parallel circular plates fitting closely to each other, and having a common axis, the upper one being made to turn upon the lower, which is fixed. The edges are so graduated as to measure degrees and minutes. There are two spirit-levels on the upper plate, at right angles to each other, for adjusting the instrument in a perfectly level position by means of the tangent screws K L P. At M N are shown the ends of the tripod upon which the theodolite usually stands when in use. The instrument is usually provided with verniers so as to measure arcs of ten seconds, and with a compass. It is used for measuring angles, in surveying and mensuration of heights and distances, and occasionally for astronomical purposes, and as a levelling instrument.

THE-Q-RY, n. [Gr. θεωρία; θεωρέω, to view, to behold; L. theoria; It. & Sp. teoría; Fr. théorie.]

1. Speculation; plan, scheme, or system subsisting only in the mind; — opposed to practice. To execute their own theory in this church. Iloler.
2. A body of principles which explain a particular class of phenomena. True Christianity depends on fact: Religion is not theory, but act. Harte.
3. The abstract principles of any art or science; as, "The theory of medicine." Dunghison.
4. Proposed explanation of any phenomenon; as, "The Newtonian theory of light."

As "a person who uses an imperfect theory with the confidence due only to a perfect one will naturally fall into abundance of mistakes, his predictions will be crossed by disturbing circumstances of which his theory is not able to take account. . . . A great quantity of mistakes has been made by those who do not understand the true use of an imperfect theory: hence much discredit has been brought upon theory in general, and the schism of theoretical and practical men has arisen. Fortunately there are many of the former who attend properly to the improvement of imperfect theory by practice; and many, calling themselves practical, who seize with avidity all that theory can do for them, and who know that, step by step, theory has been making her way with giant strides into the territory of practice for the last century and a half." P. Cyc.

Syn. — A theory is founded on inferences drawn from principles which have been established by evidence; an hypothesis is a mere supposition, or a proposition or principle assumed, or taken for granted, to account for certain phenomena. A speculation is the work chiefly of the imagination, and has little to do with realities. A sound theory; an assumed hypothesis; a fanciful speculation; a regular system; a wild scheme. "Theory and theoretical are properly opposed to practice and practical. Theory is mere knowledge; practice is the application of it. . . . Theory is the knowledge of the principles by which practice accomplishes its end. . . . Theory always implies knowledge — knowledge of a thing in its principles or causes." Fleming. — "Theory and hypothesis may be distinguished thus: an hypothesis is a guess or supposition made concerning the cause of some particular fact, with the view of trying experiments or making observations to discover the truth. A theory is a complete system of suppositions put together for the purpose of explaining all the facts that belong to some one science. For example, astronomers have suggested many hypotheses in order to account for the luminous stream which follows comets; they have also formed many theories of the heavens, or, in other words, complete explanations of all the appearances of the heavenly bodies and their movements. When a theory has been generally received by men of science, it is called a system; as the Ptolemaic system, the Copernican system." Taylor, Elements of Thought.

THÈRE (thár or thér), ad. [M. Goth. tharai; A. S. thar, thar, ther; Dut. daar; Frs. da; Old Ger. thar; Ger. da; Dan. & Sw. der; Icel. thar.] In that place; — often opposed to here. In the place where the tree falleth, there it shall lie. Eccl. xi. 3. There the wicked cease from troubling, and there the weary be at rest. Job iii. 17. Precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little. Isa. xxviii. 10. Darkness there might well seem twilight here. Milton.

It is often used at the beginning of sentences, sometimes to introduce a verb or phrase with emphasis, and it serves to throw the nominative after the verb; as, "A man came," or "There came a man." Is there no balm in Gilead? Jer. vii. 22. There are delivered in Holy Scripture many weighty arguments for this doctrine. Watts. In human actions there are no degrees described. Sp. Taylor. Wherever there is sense or perception, there some idea is actually produced. Locke.

There, when used as an adverb of place, signifying in that place, as, "A man was there," is pronounced thare; but when it is used merely to introduce a verb or phrase, as, "There was a man," it is pronounced ther. "Chastisement is not in heaven, because there (thäre) there (ther) is no sin, nor in hell, because there (thäre) there (ther) is no amendment." Dr. Owen.

THÈRE'A-BÖÜT, } ad. 1. Near that place.
THÈRE'A-BÖÜTS, } Shaks.

2. Near that number, quantity, quality, degree, or state; nearly. One hundred and fifty years or thereabouts. Davies.

3. Concerning that matter.

They were much perplexed thereabout. Luke xxiv. 4.

“Thereabouts is the more common, though Johnson says, the less proper.”

THÈRE-ÂF'TER (thâr-âf'ter), ad. 1. According or conformably to that; accordingly. Milton.

When you can draw the head indifferent well, proportion the body thereafter. Peaceman.

2. After that; afterwards.

Spenser.

THÈRE-ÂT' (thâr-ât'), ad. 1. At that place.

Many there be that go in thereat. Matt. vii. 13.

2. At that; on that account.

Every error is a stain to the beauty of nature, for which cause it blusheth thereat, but glorieth in the contrary. Hooker.

THÈRE-BY' (thâr-by'), ad. 1. Near or by that place; near by. [R.]

Thereby a crystal stream did gently play. Spenser.

2. By that; by means, or in consequence, of that; through the medium of that.

The people may thereby learn what their duties are. Hooker.

THÈRE-FÖR', ad. For that or for this. Wright.

THÈRE-FÖRE (thêr'fôr or thâr'fôr) [thêr'fôr, S. W. F. K. Sm. R. Wb.; thâr'fôr, J. E. Ja.; thâr'fôr, P.], conj. & ad.

1. For that or for this; for that or this reason.

Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. John x. 17.

If the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body, is it therefore not of the body? 1 Cor. xii. 15.

This is the latest parley we will admit; therefore to our best mercy give yourselves. Shak.

2. Consequently; by consequence.

He blushes; therefore he is guilty. Shak.

3. In consideration of; in return for.

Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee; what shall we have therefore? Matt. xix. 27.

It is commonly reckoned as an adverb, but it generally partakes of the nature of a conjunction.

“When there is in composition in the word therefore, the e is generally shortened, as in were, but in my opinion improperly.” Walker.

“Excepting this word, the compounds of there are, at the present day, inelegant, quaint, or technical as belonging to law.” Smart.

THÈRE-FRÖM', ad. From that or from this.

“Turn not aside therefrom.” Josh. xxiii. 6.

THÈRE-IN', ad. In that or in this. Bacon.

THÈRE-IN-TÖ', ad. Into that. Luke xxi. 21.

THÈRE-ÖF', ad. Of that or of this. Hooker.

THÈRE-ÖL'Q-GY', n. [Gr. ἔλγω, to cure, and λόγος, a discourse]. Therapeutics. [R.] R. Park.

THÈRE-ÖN', ad. On that or on this. Mark xiv. 72.

† THÈRE-ÖUT', ad. Out of that or this; therefrom. There came water thereout. Judg. xv. 19.

THÈR-ÄC, a. Theriacal; medicinal. Dunglison.

THÈR-ÄC-A, n. [Gr. θηριακή; θηρίον, a wild beast; L. theriaca; It. & Sp. terriaca, triaca; Fr. theriaque.] (Med.) A medicine believed to be capable of curing, or of preventing the effects of, the bite of a venomous animal; treacle. The most celebrated was Theriaca Andromachi, or Venice treacle. Wm. Smith. Dunglison.

THÈR-ÄL, a. Theriacal. Holland.

THÈR-ÄL-CAL, a. [Gr. θηριακός; L. theriacus; It. teriacale; Sp. teriacal; Fr. thériacal.] Pertaining to, or having, the properties of, a theriaca; medicinal. Bacon.

THÈR-ÖT'Q-MY', n. [Gr. θηρίον, a wild beast, and τέμνω, to cut.] The anatomy of animals; zootomy. Dunglison.

THÈR-MÆ, n. pl. [L., from Gr. ἔσπαι.] Hot springs or hot baths. Phillips.

THÈR-MAL, a. [Gr. θερμός, warm; ῥέω, to warm; It. termale; Sp. termal; Fr. thermal.] Pertaining to heat; hot; warm. Lyell.

Thermal springs, springs the temperature of which is above the mean temperature of the place where they rise. They are most abundant and their temperature is highest in volcanic regions; and, when most remote from them, their site usually coincides with some great derangement in the strata, as a fault or great fissure, indicating that a channel of communication was opened with the interior of the earth at some former period of local convulsion. Lyell.

THÈR-MIC, a. Relating to heat; thermal.

THÈR-MI-DÖR, n. [Gr. θερμός, warm.] The name of the eleventh month in the Persian republican calendar, which commenced on the 19th of July, and ended on the 17th of August; — so named from the great heat which characterizes that part of the year. Brande.

THÈR-MQ-CÜR-RËNT, n. (Elec.) An electric current developed by heat; thermo-electric current. Faraday.

THÈR-MQ-E-LËC'TRIC, a. [Gr. θερμός, warm, and Eng. electric.] Relating to thermo-electricity; noting electric currents developed by heat. Rogee.

Thermo-electric pair, a combination of two dissimilar metals, as a bar of antimony and a bar of bismuth, soldered together so as to form, either with or without a connecting wire, a complete circuit, enclosing a magnetic compass needle. On heating one of the junctions, an electric current is developed which deflects the needle. — Thermo-electric battery, a combination of a number of thermo-electric pairs successively connected together, the terminal bars being connected by a wire. On heating the alternate junctions, a current of electricity is developed, and traverses the completed circuit; it is called also thermo-multiplier. Such a battery connected with a delicate galvanometer is the most sensitive thermoscopic instrument ever devised, indicating even the amount of radiant heat emitted by insects. Müller.

THÈR-MQ-E-LËC'TRIC-I-TY, n. Electricity developed by the unequal distribution of heat through bodies. Proust.

THÈR-MÖM'E-TËR, n. [Gr. θερμός, warm; μέτρον, heat, and μέτρον, a measure; It. & Sp. termometro; Fr. thermomètre.] An instrument for measuring degrees or variations of heat or temperature. Young.

Air thermometer, a thermometer, of various forms, consisting, as first contrived, of a vertical glass tube, blown into a bulb at the top, and having the lower end immersed in a colored liquid. A portion of the air having been previously expelled by heat, the liquid is forced by atmospheric pressure, as the air cools, into the lower part of the tube, and afterwards rises or falls as the enclosed air contracts or expands by diminution or increase of temperature. The height of the liquid in the stem is also affected, in most forms of the instrument, by changes of atmospheric pressure, so that their indications are inaccurate. — Mercurial thermometer, a thermometer consisting of a vertical glass tube, blown into a bulb at the lower end, hermetically sealed at the top, and partly filled with pure mercury which has been freed from air and moisture by being heated in the tube before the tube was sealed, the air in the upper part of the tube having been at the same time all expelled by the mercury. Two fixed points of temperature, those of freezing and boiling water, are marked on the tube or on a scale attached to it, and the whole tube is divided into degrees or parts of equal capacity. The mercury expands faster than in proportion to the increase of heat, which produces, however, no error below the boiling point of water, being compensated by the expansion of the glass. The range of temperature measured by this instrument may extend from the freezing to the boiling point of mercury. — Fahrenheit's thermometer, a mercurial thermometer, invented in 1749, so graduated as to have 180 degrees between the freezing and boiling points of water — the freezing point being marked 32°, and the boiling point 212°. Degrees below zero are distinguished by the sign minus. This thermometer is used wherever the English language prevails. — Centigrade thermometer, a mercurial thermometer which has 100 degrees between the freezing and boiling points of water, zero being at the freezing point.

It is much used in scientific researches. See CEN TIGRADE. — Réaumur's thermometer, a mercurial thermometer, invented in 1730, with the zero at the freezing point of water, and 80° at its boiling point. — Spirit thermometer, a thermometer in which alcohol is used instead of mercury; — useful for measuring low temperatures, alcohol not being congealable. — De Lisle's thermometer, a mercurial thermometer in which there are 150 degrees between the freezing and boiling points of water, the zero being at the boiling point, and the graduation being continued downwards; — used in Russia.

Self-registering thermometer.

and the minimum temperature, in the absence of the observer. The most common form is Rutherford's, which is a combination of a spirit and a mercurial thermometer, each provided with its own scale, placed horizontally on the same piece of boxwood or ivory. The former contains a glass index, A, half an inch long, with a small knob at each end, lying in the spirit of wine. The fluid, when expanded by heat, freely passes by it, but when it contracts by cold, carries it by its attraction back towards the bulb, and thus indicates the minimum temperature. The latter contains a bit of steel wire, B, which is pushed before the mercury, but does not follow it when it contracts, and thus marks how high the temperature has been. The instrument requires adjustment whenever it is to be used. — Differential thermometer, a thermometer consisting of a tube bent twice at right angles, and terminating at each end in a bulb, a part of the tube being filled with colored liquid, and the rest of it, together with the bulbs, being filled with air. When both bulbs have the same temperature, the column of liquid is stationary, and one end of it rests at the zero of the scale. When one bulb is exposed to a higher heat than the other, as in experiments on radiation, the air within it expands, and forces the liquid down the thermometer tube, and the extent of the motion, as indicated by the graduated scale, measures the excess of heat acting on that bulb.

2. A game; trick-track. Milton.

TICK'-TACK, ad. Like the movement of a watch or clock. Ash.

TID, a. [A. S. tyddr.] Tender; soft. [R.] Bailey.

TID'-DAL, a. Pertaining to, or like, the tides; flowing and ebbing periodically. [Modern.] Perhaps no greater gain has recently been obtained than that distinct separation of the lunar and solar tides which we owe to Mr. Haughton. Nichol.
A tidal wave, a wave of the sea, which is caused by the attraction of the moon, and is felt in soul and form, in sound and sight
In soul and form, in sound and sight
Eternal outflow and recall. Whittier.
Tidal basin, a basin or dock that is filled upon the rising of the tide. Simmonds.

TID'-BIT, n. [tid and bit.] A dainty; a small, delicate morsel; a titbit. Johnson.
Syn. — See DAINTY.

TID'-DER, v. a. To use or rear tenderly; to tickle. [Local.] Johnson.

TIDE, n. [A. S. tid, tide, time; tidan, to happen; Frs. tid, time; Ger. zeit, time, tide; Dan., Sw., & Icel. tid. — Slav. zhas, czas. — W. dydd, a day.]
1. Time; season; while. [Obs. or poetical.]
There they light, to have themselves to hide
From the fierce heat, and catch the cooling breeze. Shak.
2. A periodic, alternate rising and falling of the waters of the ocean, caused chiefly by the attraction of the moon, but partly by that of the sun. Herschel.
The moon attracts most strongly the side of the earth nearest to it, and thereby draws away from the centre, or heaps up, the waters in the parts of the earth successively turned towards it. At the same time, it attracts the centre of the earth — that being nearer — more strongly than it does the opposite or remotest side of the earth, and thus draws away the centre from the waters on that side, so that they apparently recede or are there heaped up. The waters being thus heaped up at the same time in these two opposite parts of the earth, and the waters situated half way between them being thus necessarily depressed, two high and two low tides occur in the period of a little more than one revolution of the earth on its axis.
The sun in like manner tends to produce tides; but the difference between the attractions it exerts on different parts of the earth being much less because of its greater distance, its power to produce tides is only about one third as great as that of the moon, and it merely modifies the lunar tides, without producing independent ones of its own. Young.
3. Stream; current; course.
All the gold which Tagus hides,
And pays the sea in tributary tides. Dryden.
4. (Mining.) Period of twelve hours. Clarke.
Tide was formerly used by the Puritans, in composition, instead of the Roman Catholic word mass. Thus, for Christmas, Hallowmas, Lammas, they said Christ-tide, Hallow-tide, Lamb-tide. Whitsuntide was already rightly named to their hands. Nares.
Aerial or atmospheric tides, tides in the atmosphere analogous to those of the ocean, produced by the action of the sun and moon. Young. — Ebb tide, a tide which is subsiding; a falling tide. — Flood tide, a tide which is rising; a rising tide. — Neap tides, low tides occurring nearly at the time of the moon's quadrature, the sun's action then counteracting in part that of the moon by tending to depress the waters where that of the moon tends to raise them. — Spring tides, high tides occurring nearly at the time of the sun and moon's conjunction or opposition — that is, at full moon or at new moon, when those luminaries combine to raise and to depress the waters at the same places. Herschel.

TIDE, v. a. To drive by the tide or stream.
Their images, the relics of the wreck,
Torn from the naked poop, and tided back
By the wild waves, and rudely thrown ashore. Dryden.

TIDE, v. n. 1. † To betide. Robert of Gloucester.
2. To pour a flood. Philips.
To tide up or down a river or a harbor, (Naut.)

a basin or dock. Simmonds.
2. (Naut.) A place in which the tide runs with great velocity. Mar. Dict.

TIDE'-GAUGE, n. An instrument, sometimes self-registering, used on coasts and harbors to ascertain the rise and fall of the tide, thus indicating the depth of water, and enabling ships to enter tidal harbors at the proper times. Weale.

TIDE'-LESS, a. Having no tide. De la Beche.

TIDE'-LOCK, n. A lock situated between an entrance-basin and a canal, harbor, or river, and forming a communication between them;
— called also guard-lock. Buchanan.

TIDE'-MILL, n. A mill put in operation by the alternate flow and ebb of the tide. P. Cyc.

TIDE'-RIPS, n. pl. An agitation or commotion of the water of the ocean, resembling that produced by a conflict of tides or of other powerful currents. Mauzy.
Tide-rips are usually found in the neighborhood of the equatorial calms. They sometimes move along with a roaring noise; and the inexperienced navigator always expects to find his vessel drifted by them a long way out of his course; but when he comes to cast up his reckoning the next day at noon, he remarks with surprise that no current has been felt. Lieut. Mauzy.

TIDE'-RODE, n. (Naut.) The situation of a vessel at anchor, when she swings by the force of the tide; — opposed to wind-rode. Dana.

the landing of goods, in order to secure the payment of duties upon them, at the custom-house. Swift.

TIDE'-WAT-ER, n. Water alternately elevated and depressed by the direct action of the moon

TIDE'-WAVE, n. An immensely broad and excessively flat wave (not a circulating current) which follows, or endeavors to follow, the apparent motions of the moon or of the sun. Herschel.

TIDE'-WAY, n. That part of a river, or a channel, in which the tide ebbs and flows. Mar. Dict.

TIDE'-WHEEL, n. A water-wheel with float-boards standing radiantly round it, or having their planes passing through the centre, so as to be applicable to tide-rivers, where the current runs alternately in opposite directions; under-shot-wheel; stream-wheel. Lib. Useful Knowl.

1. The act of twisting. Johnson.

2. (Mech.) The lateral displacement or detorsion of the opposite parts of a solid, in opposite directions, the central particles only remaining in their natural state; the twisting of a body by the application of a lateral force:—the force with which a string, wire, or other slender body returns, or tends to return, to a state of rest, after it has been twisted. Young.

Torsion balance, an instrument, invented by Coulomb, for measuring small attractive or repulsive forces, as those of electricity and magnetism, by the torsion or twisting of a fine vertical, dependent, metallic wire, the lower end of which carries a needle moving freely in a horizontal direction. The force to be measured is made to act on one end of the needle, the deflection of which indicates the degree of torsion produced, and thus the degree of force exerted.—Torsion electrometer, a torsion balance for measuring small attractive or repulsive electrical forces.

1. (Zool.) The common name of oviparous reptiles of the order Chelonia, or Testudinata, having a body short, discoidal, or swollen, and enclosed in a case formed of two shields united by their margins, and composed of a series of imbedded plates, which leaves the head, neck, limbs, and tail free. They have no teeth, but their jaws are covered with a horny substance. Baird.

Box tortoise (Cistuda Carolina).

The sea-tortoise is by our sailors vulgarly called turtle, whereof there are four different kinds. Catesby, 1754.

Tortoises are usually divided into those that live upon land and those that subsist in the water; and use has made a distinction even in the name—the one being called tortoise, and the other turtle. Goldsmith's Animated Nature, 1774.

2. (Mil.) Among the ancients, an arrangement of a body of soldiers for protection against darts, stones, and similar missiles, formed by those in the first rank placing their bucklers vertically in front, and those behind, in stooping or kneeling posture, holding their bucklers close together over their heads;—used especially by storming parties. Dryden.

Whatever be the origin of the word tortoise, it seems to have no affinity with any word in Anglo-Saxon or any other Teutonic language, nor is it found at all in the earliest English writers. Sir John Mandeville, who died in 1372, renders the Latin testudo, and the French tortue, into English by the term snail. Richard Eden's translation of Oviedo's Natural History of the Indies [1555] contains probably the first printed account in the English language of the West India tortoise, and furnishes the earliest use of the word. Where Oviedo says, "En la ysle de Cuba se hallan tan grandes tortugas que," &c., Eden translates thus: "In the Island of Cuba we found great tortoyes (which are certain shellfishes) of such bigness that." &c. The explanatory words, inserted by the translator in a parenthesis for the benefit of English readers, seem to show that the term was either wholly new to the language, and coined by him for the occasion from the Spanish word, or, what is more probable, that he had heard it from the seamen of that day, with whom it is known he associated, and who had caught it from Spanish sailors, and modified it with a sailor's usual license.—See TURTLE. C. Folsom.

|| TÔR'TOISE-SHELL, n. The plates or blades of the shell of certain sea-tortoises, or turtles, especially of Chelonia imbricata, or hawks-bill turtle, used for making combs, work-boxes, cabinets, spectacle-cases, &c., and in inlaying and other ornamental work. Tomlinson.

3. † Turn; cast; manner.

The whole tour of the passage is this. Bentley.

4. † A tower. Milton.

5. (Mil.) That which is done by succession.

“My experience fails me if this word is not slowly conforming to the true English sound of the vowels heard in thou.” Walker. The English orthoepists, more recent than Walker, give no countenance to this pronunciation, which is regarded as a vulgarism.

Syn. — See EXCURSION, JOURNEY.

TÔUR-BILL'ION (tūr-bil'yōn), n. [Fr. tourbillon, a whirlwind, a tourbillon, from L. turbo, turbis, a whirlwind.] An ornamental fire-work, which turns round in the air, presenting the appearance of a scroll of fire. Francis.

P. Cyc.*

“I am much mistaken if general usage does not incline to the short sound of the diphthong in these words [tournament and tourney]; and that this sound ought to be indulged is palpable to every English ear, which finds a repugnance at giving the French sound to any word that is not newly adopted. Journay, nourish, courage, and many other words from the French, have long been Anglicized, and there is no good reason that this word should not fall into the same class. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Dr. Kenrick, and Mr. Perry give the first sound of this word; and Buchanan and W. Johnston, the second.” Walker.

TÔURN'ÉY, or TÔURN'ÉY (tār'ne, S. K. R.; tār'ne, Ja.; tār'ne or tūr'ne, W. C.; tūr'ne, Sm. O.), n. [Fr. tournoi.] A tournament. Bacon.

In old writers, the two parts of this word are sometimes separated, as, "To God ward." 2 Cor. iii. 4.

Their powers are marching unto Paris ward. Shak.

"In the prepositions toward and towards, and the adverbs forward and forwards, backward and backwards, the two forms are used indiscriminately. But, as the first form in all these is also an adjective, it is better to confine the particles to the second. Custom, too, seems at present to lean this way." Dr. Campbell. — See BACKWARD.

"Notwithstanding our poets almost universally accent this word on the first syllable, and the poets are pretty generally followed by good speakers, there are some, and those not of the lowest order, who still place the accent on the second. These should be reminded that, as inwards, outwards, backwards, forwards, and every other word of the same form, have the accent on the first syllable, there is not the least reason for pronouncing towards with the accent on the last." Walker.

TÔW'ARD, or TÔW'ARDS, ad. Near at hand; advancing; in a state of preparation.

We have a trifling foolish banquet toward. Shak.

Here's a voyage towards that will make us all. Middleton.

TRĀDE'-WĪND, n. A name applied to winds having a general tendency from north-east and south-east towards the equator, and blowing constantly in two tropical belts, which vary somewhat in latitude at different seasons of the year, are seldom visited by rain, and are separated by an intermediate belt or region, in which prevail calms, variable winds, and copious rains accompanied with thunder and lightning;—so called because favorable to commerce. Daniel.

The trade-winds are caused by the rushing of air from higher latitudes to fill up the space left by the heated, rarefied, and ascending air in the neighborhood of the equator, and acquiring at the same time a relative motion westward, in consequence of its not having so great a velocity of rotation towards the east as the equatorial parts of the earth. The northern limit of the north-east trade-wind is about 26° or 29° of north latitude, where the wind blows nearly from the east; its southern limit varies from about 4° to 10° or 12° of north latitude. The limits of the south-east trade-wind are not so far from the equator; its northern limit is about 3° of north latitude. The regularity of the trade-winds is disturbed in some places by local causes, and especially in the Indian Ocean. They extend 3° or 4° farther from the equator in the western than in the eastern part of the Atlantic Ocean. Dancl. Young. Bowditch

TRĀD'ING, p. a. Carrying on trade or commerce; mercantile; commercial. Dryden.

TRĀD'ING, n. The act or the business of carrying on commerce. Bp. Hall.

TRĀG'Ā-CĀNTH, n. [L. tragacanthum; from Gr. τραγάκινθα, the astragalus, or goat's-thorn; τράγος, a goat, and κάνθα, a thorn.]. A concrete juice or gum yielded by Astragalus verus, and other spiny species of that genus. It has no smell and little taste, and is insoluble in alcohol and water. Lindley. Wood & Bache.

Tragacanth, when put into water, absorbs a certain portion of it, swells very much, and forms a soft, adhesive paste. It is composed of two different constituents, one soluble in water and resembling gum arabic, the other swelling in water, but not dissolving. The latter has been called tragacanthine. Wood & Bache.

TRĀG'Ā-CĀN'THINE, n. (Chem.) A name formerly applied to a proximate principle supposed to be peculiar to tragacanth, but now regarded as identical with bassorine. Wood & Bache.

† TRA-GĒ'DĪ-OŪS, a. Tragical; tragic. Fabyan.

TRĀG'Ē-DY (trād'je-de), n. [Gr. τραγῳδία; τράγος, a goat, and ὕδης, ῥῶν, a song, an ode; L. tragædia; It. & Sp. tragedia; Fr. tragédie.]

1. A dramatic composition or poem representing human passions, and the woes and misfortunes of life, in such a manner as to excite grief, pity, indignation, or horror; — opposed to comedy; as, "The tragedies of Shakespeare."

At first, the tragedy was void of art;

A song where each man danced and sung his part,

And of god Bacchus roaring out the praise,

Sought a good vintage for their jolly days. Dryden.

Imitate the sister of painting, tragedy. Dryden.

2. A shocking deed or event in which lives are taken or lost, as a massacre. Shak.

The name of tragedy (Gr. τραγῳδία) is most probably derived from the goat-like appearance of the satyrs, who sang or acted with mimetic gesticulations the old Bacchic songs, with Silenus, the constant companion of Dionysus, or Bacchus, for their leader. According to another opinion, the word tragedy was first coined from the goat that was the prize for it; this derivation, however, as well as another, connecting it with the goat offered on the altar of Bacchus, around which the chorus sang, is not equally supported either by the etymological principles of the language or the analogous instance of κωμῳδία (comedy), the revel-song. Wm. Smith.

† TRĀG'IC, n. 1. An author of tragedy. Savage.

2. A tragedy; a tragic drama. Prior.

TRĀG'IC, } a. [Gr. τραγικός; L. tragicus; It. tragico; Sp. tragico; Fr. tragique.]

1. Of, or pertaining to, tragedy. "The tragic stage." Spenser. "This tragic play." Shak.

2. Resembling, or partaking of, tragedy; shocking; fatal; mournful; dreadful; calamitous; sorrowful. "A tragic story." Addison.

So tragic and merited a fate. Sandys.

Tragic denotes belonging to tragedy; tragic, resembling tragedy. The like holds of comic and comical. We say, 'The tragic muse,' 'The comic muse;' and 'A tragic poet,' for a writer of tragedy, and 'A comic poet,' for a writer of comedy; but 'I heard a tragic story,' for a mournful story, and 'I met with a comical adventure,' for a droll adventure." Dr. Campbell.

TRĀG'IC-CAL-LY, ad. In a tragical manner; shockingly; mournfully; calamitously. South.

TRĀG'IC-CAL-NĒSS, n. The state or the quality of being tragical. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Syn. — See ESSAY.

TREAT'MENT (trét'ment), n. [Fr. traitement.]

1. The act or the manner of treating; management; usage.

I speak this with an eye to those cruel treatments which men of all ages are apt to give the characters of those who do not agree with them. Addison.

He soon satisfied them, by the humanity of his conduct, and by his assurances of their future security and honorable treatment, that they had nothing to fear. Asson.

2. Entertainment; treat. [R.] Dryden.

Accept such treatment as a swain affords. Pope.

Syn. — Treatment may be applied to that which is partial and temporary; usage, to that which is more permanent and continued. All persons may meet with good or ill treatment from those with whom they casually come in connection, but usage is applied more properly to those who are more or less in the power of others.

A coalition of three vowels in one syllable or sound; a trigraph; as, eau, eye. Johnson.

"Two aspirations in succession, says Mr. Elphinstone, seem disagreeable to an English ear, and therefore one of them is generally sunk. Thus diphthong and triphthong are pronounced diphthong and triphthong. P is lost, as well as h, in ph, and therefore it is no wonder we hear theophony and ophthalmology, which is the pronunciation I have adopted, as agreeable to analogy. Nay, such an aversion do we seem to have to a succession of aspirates, that the h is sunk in isthmus, Esther, and Demosthenes, because the s, which is akin to the aspiration, immediately precedes. Mr. Sheridan pronounces the first syllable of ophthalmic like off, but the first of diphthong and triphthong like di and tri. Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, and Mr. Perry pronounce diphthong and triphthong in the same manner as Mr. Sheridan. Dr. Kenrick gives no pronunciation to diphthong, but makes the h silent in triphthong; while Baileys pronounces the h in ophthalmic, but makes it either way in diphthong and silent in triphthong. It may be remarked, that Dr. Jones, who wrote a spelling dictionary in Queen Anne's time, makes the h in those two words silent." Walker.

1. Such as may be found everywhere; common-place; common; vulgar. Roscommon.
2. Of little price, value, or estimation; unimportant; light; slight; small; trifling.

So you mad fools, who for some trivial right,
For love, or for mistaken honor, fight. Dryden.

And if the means be just, the conduct true,
Applause, in spite of trivial faults, is due. Pope.

Trivial is a word borrowed from the life. Mark three or four persons standing idly at the point where one street bisects at right angles another, and discussing there the worthless gossip, the idle nothings, of the day; there you have the living explanation of the words trivial, trivialities, such as no explanation which did not thus root itself in the etymology would ever give you, or enable you to give, to others. For there you have the tres [three], the via [ways], the trivium; and trivialities properly mean such talk as is held by those idle loiterers that gather at these meetings of three roads. Trench.

Syn. — See TRIFLING.

† TRĪVĪ-AL, n. One of the three liberal arts which constituted the trivium. Wood.

† TRĪVĪ-ĀL'I-TY, n. 1. Trivialness. Qu. Rev.

TUR-BINE, n. (Hydraulics.) A hydraulic motor, consisting of a wheel, of guide curves for directing water into the wheel, and of various other parts. In one of its most common forms, it has the wheel horizontal and submerged, with a series of vertical, curved floats at the periphery, and a shaft passing through a vertical tube extending through a cast-iron flume, the circular bottom of which is in the wheel, and over the depressed central part of the wheel. The wheel is propelled by water issuing horizontally from the lowest part of the flume, and with such directions, derived from guide curves affixed to the bottom of the flume, as to act on all the floats at the same time, and flow out of the wheel at its periphery.

Nearly one half of the power of the water due to its fall, is expended in giving velocity to the water before it strikes the floats, the water being then so directed that each particle moves in nearly the same direction as the part of the float first struck by it. The particle, and the part of the float struck by it, have a velocity nearly equal to that which a body acquires by falling freely through a distance equal to half the fall of the water. The other half of the power, due to the fall of the water, is chiefly expended in pressing the water obliquely against the floats in such a way that the velocity possessed by any particle at the instant of striking the float, is gradually diminished till it is nearly expended, when the particle leaves the wheel. The particle has much less velocity during the latter part of the time it acts in propelling the floats than the part of the float it then acts on; and the propulsion, then exerted by it, results from the obliquity of the two motions to each other. If the parts of any turbine are not accurately adapted to each other, it wastes much of the power of the water; but good turbines utilize a larger part of the power of the water than any other hydraulic motor in use.

The term turbine, when used without any qualifying word, is commonly restricted to turbines in which the water passes out at the periphery. In the figure, the inner curves represent the stationary guide curves, and the outer curves, the floats or buckets of the wheel. U. A. Boyden.

"Professor Peirce exhibited a drawing of a bucket of a turbine wheel, constructed by Mr. U. A. Boyden, experiments upon which, conducted with the most scrupulous care, had shown it to produce an effect equal to eighty-eight per cent. of the power expended; and he stated that some of Mr. Boyden's wheels had given the astonishing result of ninety-two per cent. of this power." Proceedings of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences for 1850.

TÿR'AN-NÍZE, v. n. [Gr. τυραννίζω; It. tirannizzare; Sp. tiranzar; Fr. tyranniser.] [i. TYRANNIZED; pp. TYRANNIZING, TYRANNIZED.] To act the tyrant; to rule with severe, unjust, or arbitrary sway; to act with rigor and imperiousness; to be despotic; to domineer.

Whoever is most unreasonable and importunate, he will ever tyrannize and domineer over such an one. Holland.

TÿR'AN-NÍZE, v. a. To subject by tyranny. Milton.

† TÿR'AN-NOÛS, a. Despotic; tyrannical. Spenser.

The unjust and tyrannous rule of Harold.

TÿR'AN-Nÿ (tír'an-ne), n. [Gr. τυραννία, tyrannis; L. tyrannis; It. tirannia; Sp. tiranía; Fr. tyrannie. — See TYRANT.]

1. The government or sway of a tyrant; absolute monarchy imperiously administered; arbitrary or despotic rule; despotism.

The cities fell often under tyrannies which spring naturally out of popular governments. Temple.

2. The exercise of sovereign power contrary to justice, or the constitution of a state: — cruel exercise of power; cruel government.

Suspicious dispose kings to tyranny. Bacon.

3. † Severity; rigor; inclemency.

The tyranny of the open night's too rough for nature to endure. Shak.

Syn. — Both tyranny and despotism imply absolute power, and power which is exercised for the pleasure of the governor, not for the benefit of the governed. Both terms are commonly used in a bad sense; yet tyranny is more commonly applied than despotism to the abuse of power or oppression.

He who possesses and exercises arbitrary power is both a despot and a tyrant; and, if he directs that power against the people, he is an oppressor or a cruel tyrant.

Tÿ'RANT, n. [Gr. τυραννός, strictly Doric for κοίρανος, from κείρος, kéiros, a lord, a master. Liddell & Scott. — L. tyrannus; It. tiranno; Sp. tirano; Fr. tyran.]

1. An absolute monarch ruling imperiously; an arbitrary sovereign unlimited by law or constitution; a despot. Johnson.

2. One who exercises sovereign power contrary to justice or the constitution of a state: — a severe or cruel master; an oppressor. Sidney.

3. (Ornith.) A bird of the order Passeres and sub-family Tyrannina. Gray.

“Free constitutions [in Greece] having superseded the old hereditary sovereignties (βασιλείαι), all who obtained absolute power in a state were called τύραννοι, tyrants, usurpers; so that the term rather regards the way in which the power was gained than how it was exercised; as, for example, it was applied to the mild Pisistratus, but not to the despotic kings of Persia; however, as usurpation usually leads to violence, the word soon came to imply reproach, and was then used like our tyrant or despot.” Liddell & Scott.

TZÁ-RÍ'NÁ (zá-r's'ná), n. See CZARINA.

U.

U the twenty-first letter of the English alphabet, bet, and the fifth vowel, has, heretofore, in most English dictionaries, been confounded with the consonant v, as i has been with j; though the sounds and uses of the two letters are widely different. One and the same character, V, was formerly used for both letters; and the character U is of modern introduction. The two principal sounds of u are the long, as in time, and the short, as in tin. — See F and V.

“U and V were long considered the same letter, and were used indiscriminately the one for the other; but at the beginning of the 16th century their peculiarities came to be marked, and U has since been used as a vowel, and V as a consonant.” Brande.

“As a vowel u soundeth thin and sharp, as in use, and thick and flat, as in us. It never endeth any word for the nakedness, but yieldeth to the termination of the diphthong ew, as in new, screw, &c., or the qualifying e, as in sue, due, true, and the like.” B. Jonson.

Ultrâ is much used in composition; as, "Ultra-liberal"; "Ultra-republican," &c.

Û'L'TRÂ, n. One who advocates extreme measures or opinions, as in politics; an ultraist.

The ultras of either party. Ed. Rev.

We are content with repetition, and form a noun from it. Custom will not allow us to say, "The ultras of either party" is language in the power of this. Harrison.

It is a word much used in modern politics, and also with reference to religious parties. It is applied to such as carry the opinions of the party to which they belong to extremes.

Û'L'TRÂ-ÏSM, n. Extreme opinions, views, principles, or measures; radicalism. Brit. Crit.

The tendency to ultraism which influences the ablest of men in great social questions, . . . has been also the influence of affairs of practical medicine. Harrison.

Û'L'TRÂ-ÏST, n. One extravagant in his views or conduct; one who carries his opinions or measures to extremes, or beyond the convictions of the public mind; a radical. J. Tyler. Ch. Ez.

Û'L-TRA-MÂ-RÏNE', a. [L. ultra, beyond, and marinus, marine.] Being beyond the sea; foreign. "Her ultramarine dominions." Burke.

Ultramarine ashes, the residuum of lapis lazuli after the chief color has been extracted, being a purer and tenderer gray than that produced by mixture of more positive colors; — used by the old masters as a middle or neutral tint for flesh, skies, and draperies. Favholt.

Û'L-TRA-MÂ-RÏNE' (ûl'tra-mâ-rën'), n. A blue pigment formerly obtained exclusively from the lapis lazuli, but now artificially manufactured on a large scale; — a very fine, rich, and durable blue, much valued by painters. Miller.

Ultramarine consists essentially of silicate of alumina, colored probably by sulphide of sodium. If it is heated in the air, it assumes a dull green hue. Chlorine, nitric, sulphuric, and hydrochloric acids destroy the color. Miller.

Û'L-TRA-MÔN'TANE, a. [L. ultra, beyond, and montanus, pertaining to a mountain; Fr. ultramontain.] Being beyond the mountains, or the Alps; transmontane; — originally applied by Italian writers to theologians, jurists, &c., of other countries beyond the Alps, especially of France.

Ultramontane tenets, (Eccl. Law.) those tenets least favorable to the supremacy of the pope. Brande.

Û'L-TRA-MÔN'TANE, n. One living beyond the mountains: — a foreigner. Bacon.

Û'L-TRA-MÔN'TA-NÏSM, n. Ultramontane tenets, or tenets least favorable to the supremacy of the pope: — but a term used north of the Alps, for those tenets most favorable to the pope's authority. Ch. Ob.

As the nations north of the Alps, — France, Germany, &c., — have been most opposed to the papal assumption of absolute power, they have termed the endeavors of the Roman curia to extend the papal authority and destroy the consequence of the national churches, such as the Gallican church, ultramontanism. Am. Ency.

Û'L-TRA-MÔN'TA-NÏST, n. An advocate for ultramontanism. Ch. Ob.

Û'L-TRA-MÛN'DANE, a. [L. ultramundanus; ultra, beyond, and mundus, the world.] Being beyond the world, or beyond the limits of our world or system. Hutton.

Fly to imaginary ultramundane spaces. Boyle.

Û'L-TRA-PRÔT'ËS-TÂNT, n. A Protestant who holds extreme views. Hook.

Û'L-TRA-PRÔT'ËS-TÂNT-ÏSM, n. The principles or views held by ultraprotestants. Hook.

Û'L-TRA-TRÔP'Ï-CÂL, a. 1. Beyond, or not within, the tropics; pertaining to parts beyond the tropics; extratropical.

2. Of a higher temperature, or warmer, than the present temperature of the tropical regions.

During the deposition of the older fossiliferous rocks, the climate was ultratropical. Hitchcock.

Û'L'U-LÂTE, v. n. [L. ululo, ululatum.] To utter a mournful cry; to howl. [R.] Herbert.

UL-LA-TION, n. [L. ululatio.] A howling, or loud lamentation; a wailing. Th. Campbell.

UMBĒL, n. [L. umbella, an umbrella, a parasol, dim. of umbra, shade; Fr. ombelle, an umbel.] (Bot.) A form of inflorescence in which the pedicels all spring apparently from the same point, the top of the peduncle, so as to resemble, when spreading, the rays of an umbrella. Gray.

If each of the pedicels of an umbel bears a single flower, the umbel is said to be simple; but if they divide and bear other umbels, the umbel is called compound; and the assemblage of umbels is called the umbellifer, while each of the secondary umbels, or the umbellules, is called a partial umbel. Lindley.

UMBĒL-LĀR, a. Relating to, or having the form of, an umbel; umbellate. Smart.

UMBĒL-LĀTE, } a. (Bot.) Bearing, or con-UMBĒL-LĀT-ĒD, } sisting of, umbels; having an umbel or umbels; umbellar. P. Cyc.

UMBĒL-LĒT, n. (Bot.) A secondary or partial umbel; a little umbel. Darlington. Gray.

UMBĒL-LĪF'E-RĒ, n. pl. (Bot.) A natural order of plants bearing flowers in umbels. Gray.

UMBĒL-LĪF'ER-OŪS, a. [Eng. umbel, and L. fero, to bear.] (Bot.) Bearing umbels; having flowers disposed in an umbel, as the milkweed, the primrose, &c. Gray.

UMBĒL-LŪLE, n. (Bot.) A secondary or partial umbel; an umbellet. Lindley.

UMBĒR, n. 1. (Min.) A brown ochreous ore or earth, of a fine and compact texture, dry feel, adhering a little to the tongue, and composed of silica, oxide of iron, manganese, and water; — used as a brown pigment, and sometimes in coloring porcelain. Cleveland.

"The term umber is said to be derived from Ombria, or Spoleto, in Italy, where it was first obtained." Brande.

2. A variety of peat or brown coal used as a pigment. Brande.

UMBĒR, n. 1. (Ornith.) A bird of the size of a crow, and of the color of umber, found generally in Africa; Scopus umbretta. Eng. Cyc.

2. (Ich.) A fish of the salmon family; the common grayling, found in clear, rapid streams; Thymallus vulgaris. Wm. Smith.

UMBĒRED (ūmb'erd), a. Shaded or darkened, as with umber. "Umbred face." Shak.

UMBĒL'IC, n. The navel; the centre. [R.] Herbert.

UMBĒL'IC, } a. [L. umbilicus, the navel.]
UMBĒL'IC-ĀL, } Pertaining to the umbilical or navel; — navel-shaped. Dunglison.

Umbilical arteries, (Anat.) arteries which exist only in the fetus, and seem, as it were, continuations of the primitive iliacs. They clear the umbilical ring, and proceed to the placenta, to which they carry the residuum of the blood sent to the fetus by the umbilical vein. Dunglison. — Umbilical cord, (Anat.) the navel string, a cord-like substance which extends from the placenta to the umbilicus of the fetus. Its usual length is from 16 to 22 inches. Dunglison. — (Bot.) A sort of cord by which certain ovules are attached to the placenta, being a prolongation of it; funiculus. Lindley. — Umbilical region, (Anat.) the middle region of the abdomen, in which the umbilicus is placed. Dunglison. — Umbilical ring, (Anat.) a fibrous ring which surrounds the aperture of the umbilicus. Dunglison. — Umbilical vein, (Anat.) a vein which arises from the placenta, and terminates at the fissure on the inferior surface of the liver of the fetus, to which it conveys the blood necessary for its nutrition. — Umbilical vessels, (Anat.) the two arteries and umbilical vein. Dunglison.

UMBĒL'IC-ĀTE, } a. [L. umbilicatus.] Navel-UMBĒL'IC-ĀT-ĒD, } shaped; being depressed in the centre. Gray.

2. (Ant.) A ball or boss on the projecting ends of the cylinder on which the books of the ancients were rolled. Wm. Smith.

3. (Conch.) The depression in the centre round which the shell is convoluted. Brande.

4. (Bot.) The part by which a seed is attached to the placenta; the hilum; — also a depression or an elevation about the centre of a given surface. Henslow.

The umbilicus, or hilum, is frequently of a different color from the rest of the seed, not uncommonly being black. In plants with small seeds it is minute, and is recognized with difficulty; but in some it is so large as to occupy a third of the whole surface of the seed, as in the horse-chestnut. Lindley.

5. (Geom.) The focus of an ellipse; — so used by the old geometers: — a term now applied to a point of a surface through which all the lines of curvature pass. At this point the two principal curvatures are equal. P. Cyc.

UMBĒS (ūmb'bz), n. pl. A deer's entrails. — See NOMBS. Bailey.

UMBŌ, n. [L.] 1. A protuberance or boss, as of a buckler. Swift.

2. (Conch.) The point of a bivalve shell immediately above the hinge. Brande.

UMBŌ-NĀTE, } a. (Bot.) Having a low, UMBŌ-NĀT-ĒD, } rounded projection like a boss; bossed. Gray.

UMBĒRĀ, n. [L.] 1. A shadow. Wm. Smith.

In ancient times, one who went to a feast merely at the solicitation of one invited was called umbra, because he followed the principal guests as a shadow follows a body. Wright.

2. (Astron.) The dark conical shadow projected from a planet or satellite, on the side opposite to the sun, within which a spectator could see no part of the sun's disk; — opposed to penumbra. Herschel.

The passage from the pure umbra to the penumbra is quite insensible; the softening down of the shading is so gradual, that it is impossible to tell the exact moment when any remarkable point on the moon's surface leaves the penumbra to pass into the umbra, or the reverse. Nichol.

UMBĒRĀ-CŪ'LĪ-FŌRM, a. [L. umbraculum, any thing that furnishes shade, and forma, form.] Umbrella-shaped, like a mushroom. Gray.

UMBĒRĀGE, n. [Fr. ombrage, from L. umbra, a shade; It. & Sp. ombra, a shadow, umbrage.] 1. A shade; a shadow; obscurity.

The umbrage, or shade, keeps them from growth. Hudoe.
In the dark umbrage of a green hill's shade. Byron.

2. A slight show or appearance. [R.]
It is also evident that St. Peter did not carry himself so as to give the least overture of umbrage to make any one suspect of his being a hypocrite. Ep. Taylor.

3. A suspicion of an intended offence or affront; resentment; offence; pique; grudge.

So the king should take no umbrage of his arming and protection. Bacon.
It will be convenient to give him any umbrage, by seeing him in a bad light. Dryden.

UMBĒRĀGE-OŪS (ūmb'ra-'je-ŭs, W. P. J. Ja.; ūmb'r'jūs, S. F. K. Sm. Wb.), a. [Fr. ombrageux; umbr (L. umbra), shade.]

1. Yielding shade; shady; gloomy; murky. Umbraeous grots and caves of cool recess. Milton.

2. †Obscure; not easy to be perceived. The present constitution . . . is very umbrageous. Wotton.

3. †Having umbrage, or disposed to take umbrage. Warburton.

UMBĒRĀGE-OŪS-LY, ad. With umbrage.

UMBĒRĀGE-OŪS-NĒSS, n. Shadiness. Raleigh.

UMBĒRĀ-ĒD, a. [L. umbratus, to shade.] Shadowed; adumbrate. Bullockar.

UMBĒRĀT'IC, } a. [L. umbraticus; It. om-UMBĒRĀT'IC-ĀL, } bratico; Sp. umbrático.]

1. Shadowy; typical. "Those umbratic representations." Barrow.

2. Keeping at home, or within doors; retired; secluded. [R.] B. Jonson.

UMBĒRĀ-TĪLE (ūmb'ra-tīl, W. P. Sm. Wb.; ūmb'rāt'īl, S. K.), a. [L. umbratilis.]

1. Unsubstantial; unreal; shadowy. Jonson.
Natural hieroglyphics of our fugitive, umbratilis, anxious, and transitory life. Evelyn.

2. Being in the shade; retired. Mason.

UMBĒRĀTIOUS, a. [Old Fr. umbrage.] Disposed to take umbrage; captious; suspicious. Wotton.

UMBĒREL, n. An umbrella. Shelton.

UMBĒRĒLĀ, n. [L. umbella, a parasol, an umbrella; umbra, a shade; It. ombrella.]

1. A folding shade, or screen, carried in the hand as a protection from the rain or the rays of the sun; — usually consisting of a rod or stick, to one end of which ribs or strips of whalebone, rattan, &c., are attached and covered with silk, cotton, or some similar material. Dryden.

2. (Zool.) A genus of gastropodous mollusks, so called from the resemblance of the shell to an umbrella. Baird.

UMBĒRĒLŌ, n. An umbrella. Tatler.

UMBĒRĒ-ĒRE, n. That part of the helmet that screens or covers the face; a visor. Spenser.

UMBĒRĒ-ER-OŪS, a. [L. umbra, a shade, and fero, to bear.] Casting a shade. Smart.

UMBĒRĒL, n. [L. umbra, a shade.] (Ancient Armor.) A projection like the peak of a cap, to which a face-guard was sometimes attached, which moved freely upon the helmet, and could be lifted up like the beaver. Fairholt.

UMBĒRĒNĀ, n. (Ich.) A genus of marine, acanthopterygious fishes, of the family Scienidae, allied to the perches, but having no teeth on the vomer or palatines. Yarrell.

UMBĒRĒGE, n. 1. An adjustment of a controversy by an umpire; arbitration; arbitrament.

I am appealed to by both. . . if my umprage may stand, I award an eternal silence to both parts. Ep. Hall.

2. The power or authority of an umpire; the right to decide a dispute or controversy.

From civil society the state of war is excluded by the umpire, who has been provided . . . for the ending all differences. Locke.

UMBĒRE (ūm'pīr, W. J. F. Ja. K. Sm. R. C. Wb.; ūm'pīr, S.; ūm'pīr or ūm'pīr, P.), n. [Skinner admires the ingenuity, but doubts the truth of Minsheu's etymology, from the Fr. un père, a father. Richardson. — "Umpire is supposed to be derived from the L. impar, uneven or odd. It is, however, also expressed in Latin, imperator, with which the Scotch oversman, and Fr. sur-arbitre, correspond in signification." Burrill. — "An umpire, one who is chosen by two, four, or any even number of arbitrators (on their being equally divided on their award), to give his casting vote: it is a variation of impar, for odd." Cleveland. — In Piers Plouhman written nompeyr; whence the Fr. nompair, without peer, and thus sole judge, may be preferred as the true source. Richardson.]

1. A third party to whom a dispute is referred for settlement; an arbitrator; an arbiter.

Just Death, kind umpire of men's miseries,
With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence. Shak.

2. (Law.) A person to whom a matter which has been submitted to arbitrators, is, in case of their disagreement, referred for final decision.

If they [the arbitrators] do not agree, it is usual to add, that another person be called in as umpire (arbitrator or impar), to whose judgment it is referred. Blackstone.

"This word, says Johnson, Minsheu, with great applause from Skinner, derives from un père, in French, a father. But, whatever may be its derivation, one should think, in pronunciation, it ought to class with empire; and yet we find our orthoepists considerably divided in the sound of the last syllable of both these words.

"Empire. Dr. Kennick, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, and Mr. Perry rhyme it with fire; but Mr. Sheridan and Buchanan with the first of pyr-a-mid.

"Umpire. Mr. Sheridan and W. Johnston rhyme it with fire; but Mr. Perry, Mr. Scott, and Buchanan, with far; and Dr. Kennick with the first of pyr-a-mid.

"Amidst this variety and inconsistency, we find a preponderancy to the long sound of i as in fire; and this, in my opinion, is the most eligible.

"Rampire and vampire follow the same analogy; and sature and sampare may be looked on as irregular." Walker.

SYN. — See ARBITER, JUDGE.

† ŪM'PĪRE, v. a. To decide as an umpire; to arbitrate; to settle. Bacon.

ŪM'PĪRE-SHIP, n. The office of an umpire. We refuse not the arbitrament and umpreship of the Holy Ghost. Jeruel.

ŪM'QUĪLE (ūm'kwīl), ad. [This seems to be merely A. S. hwilom, inverted. Jamieson.] Formerly. [Scot.] Douglas. Jamieson.

ŪN-. [A. S. un-; Dut. on-; Frs. un-, on-; Ger. un-; Dan., Sw., & Icel. o-, u-.—"This particle, generally giving a negative sense to the words to which it is prefixed, is a contraction, as some think, from the Ger. ohne, without; or it may be thus derived in A. S., un, an, uan, wan, wanting; wana, a deficiency." Bosworth.] A prefix denoting negation, privation, deterioration, or opposition.

— This Saxon prefix is equivalent in meaning to the privative a of the Greeks and the privative in of the Latins; and it is placed, almost at will, before adjectives and adverbs, and before perfect participles of active verbs to form adjectives, and also before many present participles, a considerable number of nouns, and a small number of verbs.

When prefixed to adjectives, participles, and adverbs, it is uniformly interpreted by not; in substantives, by the want or absence of; and in verbs it commonly signifies the reversing or annulling of the action or state expressed by the simple verb.

The verbs to unarm, unclasp, uncover, undo, unload, and some others, express a positive act of privation.

There are some very common adjectives which do not take this negative prefix; as, good, bad, little, small, great, large, near, distant, right, wrong, &c.

The adjectives unequal, unabridged, unseen, unsold, &c., are purely negative, and imply merely the absence or negation of that which is denoted by the more simple terms equal, abridged, &c. But the adjectives unhappy, unbecoming, unsafe, and some others, have a positive as well as a negative signification, implying not only the want of what is expressed by the simple words happy, becoming, &c., but also the presence of the contrary quality.

There are a few cases in which the negative prefixes in and un are used indifferently; as, infrequent or unfrequent, inexpert or unexpert, inexperienced or unexperienced, ineligible or uneligible, &c. — The prefix un is more commonly used before adjectives derived from the Anglo-Saxon, and in before such as are derived from the Latin.

 Undermeal is not derived from meal, a repast, but from A. S. mal, for part or portion, as in dropmeal, piecemeal, &c. "The after part of the day." Hence it is Latinized by pomerides, or post-meridies, in the Promptuarium Parvulorum. Nares.
 I think I am furnished for catern [Catherine] pears for one undermeal. B. Jonson.
 "That is, I have enough for one afternoon. — It has been explained an afternoon's meal, or slight repast after dinner; but that is contradicted by the following examples. Here, for instance, it means evidently the time after dinner:
 He hath dined at a tavern, and slept his undermeal at a bawdy-house. Nash.
 Perhaps, also, for the siesta, or afternoon's repose: —
 And in a narrower limit than the forty years' undermeal of the seven sleepers. Nash.
 To put it out of all doubt, in Coles's English Dictionary, 1677, I find undermeals exactly explained afternoons." Nares.

 ǪN-DŪ-LĀT'ION, n. 1. A motion like that of waves; waving motion; fluctuation; vibration.
 Worms and leeches move by undulation. Boiss.
 2. Appearance of waves; wavy appearance.
 The root of the wilder sort [is] incomparable for its crisped undulations. Evelyn.
 3. (Med.) A wave-like motion of a fluid collected in any natural or artificial cavity, which is felt by pressure, or by percussion; — called also fluctuation. Dunblison.
 4. (Mus.) The agitation of the air occasioned by the vibration of any sonorous body, as of the strings of a viol. Moore.
 5. (Physics.) A liquid, aerial, or luminous wave.
 "From a comparison of various experiments, it appears that the breadth of the undulations constituting the extreme red light, must be supposed to be, in air, about one thirty six thousandth of an inch, and those of the extreme violet about one sixty thousandth; the mean of the whole spectrum, with respect to the intensity of light, being about one forty-five thousandth. From these dimensions it follows, calculating from the known velocity of light, that almost 500 millions of millions of the slowest of such undulations must enter the eye in a single second." Young.
 ǪN-DŪ-LĀT'ION-ĪST, n. An advocate for a theory founded on undulations of light. Phil. Mag.

 Undulatory theory, (Opt.) a theory respecting the nature of light, now generally adopted by the most eminent writers on optics, which supposes that there is a very subtle, elastic medium, called ether, or ethereal medium, pervading all bodies and all space; and that undulations or vibrations are excited in this medium by luminous bodies, and are propagated from them to the eye, and produce vision, in a manner analogous to that in which aerial vibrations, striking against the ear, produce the sensation of sound, — the intensity of light depending on the amplitude, and its color on the rate or frequency of the vibrations. (See VIBRATION.) The ethereal particles, unlike the aerial particles, whose motions constitute sound, are supposed to oscillate, not in the direction of the line of propagation, but transversely to it — resembling, in this respect, the particles of water in a wave, which move up and down without advancing, while the wave propagates itself horizontally. By supposing the undulations of the ethereal particles to be modified by their action on each other, as in the interference of light (see INTERFERENCE), or by the action of bodies encountered by them, as they are propagated from their luminous source, not only nearly all the phenomena of light have been explained by the theory, but facts before unknown, as conical refraction (see REFRACTION), have been discovered by mathematical deduction from it; while some phenomena, as the interference of light, are inexplicable by the opposite theory of emission, which supposes light to consist of material particles emitted from luminous bodies. The existence of an ethereal medium, pervading the celestial regions, is regarded as established by the resistance encountered by Encke's comet. — See INFLECTION, and POLARIZATION. *Young. Herschel.  Ū-NĲ-CŌRN, n. [L. unicornus; unicornis, one-horned; unus, one, and cornu, a horn.]
 1. A name applied to an unknown or a fabulous animal having one horn; the monocoeros.
 2. "The oryx (Oryx leucophaea), remarkable for its long, slender horns, and being most probably the animal which gave origin to the fabulous unicorn of the ancients . . . and frequently represented in the ancient monuments of Egypt." Burd.

"The chiru (Pantholops Hodgsonii), inhabiting the elevated plains of Tibet, and which, from often losing one of its horns in consequence of its pugnacious propensities, has been called by the natives the unicorn, being considered by them to possess only a single horn." Baird.

It has been a question whether one of the species, L. unicornis, or Linneus, Rhinoceros indicus of Cuvier) is not the Reem (or Rem) of Scripture (Num. xxiii. 22; Deut. xxxiii. 17, &c.). In the Septuagint the word is translated Monokeros, or Unicorn, except in Isaiah, where it is rendered Adpat (or the mighty or powerful ones). In the Tigurine and Vulgate versions the word is rendered (Num. xxiii. 22; Job xxxix. 9, 10) Rhinoceros, with a note to the former that others read Monoceros. In the Bible "Imprinted at London by Robert Baker, Printer to the King's most excellent Maestie;" ("Breeches Bible"), the word used is "Unicorne"; and Unicorn is the expression in the version now in use in our churches.

Some are of opinion that the Reem or Reim of Scripture were savage animals of the bovine genus, and others that the word signified the Oryx, observing that Reem is the Arabian name for a species of wild goat or gazelle. Th. se allege that the Reem was two-horned. The better opinion seems to be that the animal or animals intended to be designated in most of the passages referred to, if not in all, was or were the Rhinoceros unicornis, or Great Asiatic one-horned Rhinoceros. Eng. Cyc.

2. (Zool.) The narwhal; — called also sea-unicorn, and unicorn-whale. Baird.

4. † A pearl of great size and beauty. Ash.
- The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath;
 And in the cup an union shall he throw
 Richer than that which four successive kings
 In Denmark's crown have worn. Shak.
- The qualities [of this pearl], orient whiteness, greatness, roundness, smoothness, weight, I may tell you not easily to be found all in one, inasmuch that it is impossible to find out two perfectly sorted together in all these points. And hereupon it is that our dainties and delicacies here at Rome have devised this name for them, and call them unions, as a man would say, singular, and have themselves alone. Holland's Translation of Pliny.
5. The upper, inner corner of an ensign, the rest of the flag being called the fly. Ash.
- The union of the U. S. ensign is a blue field with white stars, representing the confederation of the states, and the fly is composed of alternate white and red stripes. The British union contains the crosses of St. George, St. Andrew, and St. Patrick, representing the union of the three kingdoms, England, Scotland, and Ireland. Dana. Mar. Dict.

8. That which unites, as one of the screws or joints in a locomotive engine. Weale.

Union, or Act of Union, (*Eng. Unwritten law (lex non scripta) includes not only general customs, or the common law, properly so called, but also the particular customs of certain parts of the kingdom, and likewise those particular laws that are by custom observed only in certain courts or jurisdictions. Blackstone. "Blackstone explains that unwritten law is so called not because it does not exist in writing, but because it was not promulgated by the legislature in a written form. His statement of the sorts of laws severally comprehended by the classes of written and unwritten law in England is erroneous. Written law comprehends not only the statutes made by the Parliament or supreme legislature, but also the written regulations issued by subordinate legislatures, as orders in council, and rules of court made by judges. Unwritten law, moreover, comprehends not only the common law which is administered by the courts styled 'courts of common law,' but also the greatest part of the law styled 'equity,' which is administered by the courts styled 'courts of equity.'" P. Cyc. "It is composed principally of the law of nature, the law of nations, the common law, and customs." Bowyer.

ŪP-ÖN, prep. [up and on.—A. S. ufan, ufon, above; Ger. oben; Dan. oven; Icel. ofan; Sw. öfvan.] On; not under; nothing being on the top or outside:—relating to.—See ON.

On and upon are nearly synonymous; but the latter often implies more emphasis and force, and a more distinct notion of something that, literally or metaphorically, bears or supports.—Upon is, perhaps, rather less used than formerly, being contracted into on. Some expressions formed with it belong only to old style; as, "Upon pity they taken away," that is, in consequence of pity; "Upon the rate of thirty thousand," that is, amounting to the rate. Smart.

Upon is, in many of its significations, now contracted into on, especially in poetry. The meaning of this particle is very multifarious; for it is applied to place, which seems its original signification; to time, which seems its secondary meaning; and to intellectual or corporeal operations. It always retains an intimation, more or less obscure, of some substratum, something precedent, or some subject. It is not easy to reduce it to any general idea." Johnson.

"Upon is always connected (affixed or prefixed) with words expressing or implying, either literally or metaphorically, a ground, foundation, standing-place, resting-place, support, or the like." Richardson.

UR-RAN-Q-LITE, n. [Gr. oûranós, the heavens, and λίθος, a stone.] An aerolite. Hutton.
UR-RAN-OL-Q-GY, n. [Gr. oûranós, the heavens, and λόγος, a discourse.] A description of the heavens; ouranography; uranography. Oswald.
UR-RAN-OS-CQ-PY, n. [Gr. oûranós, the heavens, and σκοπέω, to view.] The view of the heavenly bodies. Scudamore.

UR-RAN-NO-SQ-UR-RAN-IC, a. (Chem.) Noting an oxide composed of three equivalents of uranium and four of oxygen. Graham.
UR-RAN-NOUS, a. (Chem.) Composed of protoxide of uranium; as, "Uranous oxide": — noting salts the base of which is protoxide of uranium; as, "Uranous sulphate": — noting electro-negative elements or components with which uranium forms a haloid salt; as, "Uranous chloride." Graham.
UR-RAN-NUS, n. [L.] (Astron.) One of the planets of the solar system, distant from the sun upwards of 1800 millions of miles, and having a diameter of 35,000 miles. It was discovered by Sir William Herschel in 1781, who named it the Georgium Sidus, in honor of George III. It has also been called Herschel, and was sometimes termed the Georgian. Herschel. Brande.
UR-RANUS is attended by four, probably by five or six satellites. Contrary to the unbroken analogy of the solar system, the planes of their orbits are nearly perpendicular to the ecliptic, and in those orbits their motions are retrograde. Certain small irregularities in the motions of Uranus led to the discovery of Neptune in 1846. Herschel.
UR-RAN-Ō, n. [Sp.] (Min.) A variety of trona found at the bottom of a lake in Maracaibo, and in other places, and composed chiefly of carbonic acid, soda, and water. Dana.
UR-RATE, n. (Chem.) A salt composed of uric acid and a salifiable base. Miller.
UR-RAN, a. [L. urbanus; urbis, urbis, a city; It. & Sp. urbano; Fr. urbain.] Of or pertaining to a city. Whishaw.
Urban servitude, (Civil Law) a servitude annexed to an urban estate. Burnell.
UR-BANE' [ur-bān', P. K. Sm. Wb.; ur-bān', Ja.], a. [L. urbanus. — See URBAN.] Civil; polite; refined; polished; courteous; elegant.
UR-BAN-NIST, n. A sort of pear. Prince.
UR-BAN-ITY, n. [L. urbanitas; It. urbanità; Sp. urbanidad; Fr. urbanité.] 1. The state of being urbane; civility; elegance; politeness; polished manners. Dryden.
2. Facetiousness. [E.] L'Estrange.
UR-BAN-IZE, v. a. To render urbane or civil; to polish; to refine. Howell.
UR-BIC'U-LOUS, a. [L. urbis, a city.] Relating to a city; urban. [E.] Ec. Rev.
Urceolate differs from campanulate in being more contracted at the orifice, and having the limb erect. Lindley.
UR-CE-Q-LUS, n. (Bot.) An urceolate or pitcher-shaped, hollow body; as that formed in the genus Carex by two bracts, which become confluent at the edges and enclose the pistil, leaving a passage for the stigmas at their apex. Lindley.
UR-CHIN, n. [L. erinnaceus, ericius; It. riccio; Sp. erizo; Fr. hérisson. — Arm. heureuchin.] 1. (Zool.) A small mammal of the genus Erinnaceus, having the body covered with spines, and possessing the power of rolling itself up into a ball; the hedge-hog. Baird.
2. A child or small boy; — used jocosely or in contempt. "The urchin cried." Prior.
† URE (yūr), n. Practice; use; habit. Hooker.
UR-E-A [yū-rē-a, K. Wb. P. Cyc.; yū-rē-a, Brande], n. (Chem.) An essential constituent of the urine of animals, especially of the mammalia.
Urea is separated from the blood by the kidneys, and is the principal outlet for the nitrogen of the system, after the materials which compose the animal tissues have experienced oxidation under the influence of respired air, a human adult excreting about an ounce of urea daily. Miller.
UR-E'DO, n. [L., a blight of plants.] 1. (Bot.) A genus of parasitic, microscopical fungi, producing the disease called smut. Baird.
2. (Med.) Nettle rash. Dunglison.
UR-RE-JE, n. (Chem.) A name applied to salts derived from urea, from which the elements of water have been abstracted. Miller.

UR-RENS, a. [L.] (Bot.) Burning; stinging; — applied to plants, the sting of which produces the sensation of burning. Henslow.
UR-RER (yū-rē-rer) [yū-rē-rer, S. W. P. Ja. K. Sm.; yū-rē-rer, K. Wb.], n. [Gr. οὐρητήρ; οὐρέω, to make water; οὐρον, urine; It. & Sp. uretere; Fr. urètre.] (Anat.) A long, membranous, and cylindrical canal which conveys the urine from the kidneys to the bladder. Dunglison.
UR-RER-ITIS, n. (Med.) Inflammation of the ureter. Dunglison.
UR-RER-THANE, n. (Chem.) A crystallizable substance, resembling spermaceti in appearance, formed by heating carbonic ether in a sealed tube with an alcoholic solution of ammonia; — called also carbamic ether. Miller.
UR-RER-THRA [yū-rē-thra, S. W. J. E. F. Ja. K. Sm.; yū-rē-thra or yū-rē-thra, P.], n. [Gr. οὐρηθρα; οὐρέω, to make water; It. & Sp. uretra; Fr. urètre.] (Anat.) The excretory duct or canal for the urine. Dunglison.
URGE (ūr), v. a. [L. urgeo; It. urgere; Sp. urgir.] [i. URGED; pp. URGING, URGED.] 1. To press; to push; to drive; to impel.
What I have done my safety urged me to. Shak.
Her urges hit, like wave impelling wave. Pope.
2. To excite; to provoke; to exasperate.
Urges not my father's anger, Eglamour. Shak.
3. To press as an argument, or an objection.
Urges the necessity and state of times. Shak.
In dispute to urge a false religion. Tillotson.
4. To importune; to solicit; to beg.
With piercing words and importunate,
Him hasty to arise. Spenser.
URGE (ūr), v. n. To press forward. Donne.
UR-GEN-CY, n. 1. The state of being urgent; pressure of difficulty or necessity. Hooker.
2. Entreaty; solicitation; importunity. Swift.
UR-GEN-T, a. [L. urgens; It. & Sp. urgente; Fr. urgent.] That urges; pressing; importunate; cogent; impelling; vehement; violent. Shak.
I am in a very urgent necessity, but I cannot leave you. Locke.
UR-GEN-T-LY, ad. In an urgent manner; cogently; vehemently; importunately. Harvey.
URG'ER, n. One who urges. Bp. Taylor.
URGE-WON-DER, n. A sort of grain. Mortimer.
UR-IA, n. (Ornith.) A genus of guillemots. Baird.
UR-IC, a. (Chem.) Noting an acid occurring in small quantity in human urine, much more abundantly in the semi-solid excretions of birds, and constituting, in combination with ammonia, almost the whole of the excrement of serpents, such as the boa.
When uric acid is secreted in excess in man, it is often deposited in the form of hard, crystalline grains, forming what is called red gravel; or it collects into large masses, which, if retained in the bladder, gradually acquire considerable size, and constitute the most common variety of calculus. Miller.
UR-IM, n. [Heb. אֲרִימ, light and truth.] An ornament in the breastplate of the Jewish high-priest when he attended the altar. — See THUMMIM. Exod. xxviii. 30.
There are two principal opinions respecting the Urim and Thummim. One is, that these words simply denote the four rows of precious stones in the breastplate of the high priest, and are so called from their brilliancy and perfection; which stones, in answer to an appeal to God in different cases, indicated his mind and will by some supernatural appearance. The other principal opinion is, that the Urim and Thummim were two small oracular images, similar to the Teraphim, personifying revelation and truth, which were placed in the cavity or pouch formed by the folds of the breastplate, and which uttered oracles by a voice. Kitts.
UR-RI-NÆ, n. pl. (Ornith.) A sub-family of birds of the order Anseres and family Alcidae; guillemots. Gray.
UR-RINAL (yū-rē-nāl), n. [L. urinal; urina, urine; It. orinale; Sp. orinal; Fr. urinal.] A vessel for holding urine. Shak.

Ū-RĪ-NĀ'RĪ-ŪM, n. (Agric.) A receptacle or reservoir for urine. London.

Ū'RĪ-NĀ-RY (yū're-nā-ry), a. [It. orinario; Sp. urinario; Fr. urinaire.] Relating to, or resembling, urine; urinous. Brown.

Urinary calculus, a name applied to concretions of various chemical composition formed in the bladder, and consisting of the less soluble constituents of urine. Müller.

Ū'RĪ-NĀTE, v. n. To void urine. Clarke.

Ū'RĪ-NĀ-TIVE, a. Provoking urine. Bacon.

Ū'RĪ-NĀ-TOR, n. [L. urinator, to dive.] A diver; one who searches under water. Wilkins.

Ū'RINE (yū'rīn), n. [Gr. οὔρον; L. urina; It. & Sp. orina; Fr. urine.] An animal fluid, secreted by the kidneys; animal water. Shak.

Urine is secreted by the cortical part of the kidney, filtered through the tubular portion, poured drop by drop from the apices of the tubules into the pelvis of the kidney, and then it is carried into the ureters, which convey it slowly but continuously into the bladder, where it remains deposited until its accumulation excites a desire to void it. Dunglison.

In 1000 parts of urine about 957 parts are water. Of the solid matter dissolved in it, the most abundant substances are urea, alcoholic extract, chloride of sodium, watery extract, phosphoric acid, sulphuric acid, and potash. The bodies contained in the urine are mainly the products of oxidation occasioned by the action of the respired air upon the nitrogenized tissues, and upon the sulphur and phosphorus which they contain. Müller.

Ū'RINE (yū'rīn), v. n. [Fr. uriner.] To void urine; to make water; to urinate. Bacon.

Ū'RĪ-NŌM'E-TĒR, n. [L. urina, urine, and metrum, a measure.] An instrument for ascertaining the weight of urine. P. Cyc.

Ū'RĪ-NŌSE', a. Relating to urine; urinous. Ray.

Ū'RĪ-NOŪS (yū're-nūs), a. Relating to, or resembling, urine; urinous. Arbutnot.

Ū'RĪTH, n. The binding of a hedge. [Local, Eng.] Halliwel.

ŪRN, n. [L. It. & Sp. urna; Fr. urne.]

1. A vessel of a roundish form, of which the mouth is narrower than the body. Carew.
2. (Roman Ant.) A vessel for holding water or other substance:—a vessel for receiving the names of the judges, in order that the prætor might draw out of it a sufficient number to determine causes:—a vessel for receiving the ashes of the dead:—a measure of capacity for fluids, containing half an amphora, or about 3½ gallons. Wm. Smith.
3. (Bot.) A hollow, urn-like body, containing the spores of mosses, and usually elevated on a stalk named the seti; theca; spore-case. Lindley. Henslow.

ŪRN, v. a. To enclose in an urn. May.

ŪRN'AL, a. Pertaining to an urn. Brown.

ŪRN'-SHĀPED (ūr'n-shāpt), a. Shaped like an urn. Smith.

Ū-RŌS'CQ-PY (yū-rōs'ko-py), n. [Gr. οὐρον, urine, and σκοπέω, to view.] Judgment of diseases by inspection of urine. Brown.

ŪR'RY, n. A sort of blue or black clay. Mortimer.

ŪR'SĀ, n. [L.] (Astron.) The Bear;—a name applied to two northern constellations, namely, Ursa Major, or the Great Bear, and Ursa Minor, or the Little or Lesser Bear. Hutton.

The large star in the tip of the tail of Ursa Minor is near the north pole, and is called the Pole-star or North-star. Seven brilliant stars of Ursa Major form a group called the Dipper, two of which, most remote from what is called the handle, are situated nearly in the same line with the pole-star, and are sometimes called the Pointers. Both constellations have been called Charles's Wain. Hutton. Mattison.

ŪR'SĪ-FŌRM, a. [L. ursa, a bear, and forma, form.] Shaped like a bear. Smart.

ŪR'SINE, a. [L. ursinus.] Relating to, or resembling, a bear. Hamilton.

ŪR'SU-LĪNE, n. (Ecccl. Hist.) One of an order of nuns founded about the year 1537, by Angela di Brescia, but named after St. Ursula Benincasa, a native of Naples. Eden.

ŪR'SU-LĪNE, a. Relating to, or denoting, an order of nuns so called. Gray.

ŪR'SŪS, n. [L. a bear.] (Zool.) A genus of plantigrade animals; the bear. Baurd.

ŪR-TI-CĀ'CEOUS (-shus), a. (Bot.) Relating or belonging to the natural order of plants called Urticaceæ, or nettle family. Smart.

ŪR-TI-CĀ'TION, n. [L. urtica, a nettle.] A stinging or by nettles. Br. Taylor.

Ū'RŪS, n. [Gr. οὔρος; L. urus.—A Celtic word. W. Smith.] (Zool.) The specific name of the European wild ox, the primogenitor of the domesticated ox. Van Der Hoeven.

“Professor Bell is disposed to believe, with Cuvier and most other naturalists, that our domestic cattle are the degenerate descendants of the great urus. With regard to the great urus, I believe that our knowledge of it is now limited to deductions from its fossil or semi-fossil remains.” Owen. There seems to be little doubt that the fossil ox (Bos primigenius) is entirely extinct, and that all our domestic and wild cattle are derived from Bos taurus. Eng. Cyc.

ŪS, pron. pl. [M. Goth. us; A. S. us; Dut. ous; Ger. us; Dan. os; Sw. & Icel. oss.] The objective case of we.

Ūs was by old writers sometimes used as the subject nominative of a verb.

Our counsel was not long for to seche [seek];
Ūs thought it was not worth to make it wise. Chaucer.

Ū'SA-BLE, a. That may be used.

The instrument was so far finished as to be usable. Ld. Rosse.

Ū'SAGE (yū'zaj), n. [Fr.] 1. Act or manner of using or treating; treatment; behavior of one person towards another.

He hath good usage and great liberty. Shak.

Ūsage is such hard usage found In the world. Dryden.

2. Practice long continued; received practice; custom; use; habit.

Of things once received and confirmed by use long usage is a law sufficient. Hooker.

The usage which gives law to language and which is generally denominated good usage, must be ancient and present.

3. † Manners; behavior. Spenser.

Ūsage, in its broadest sense, includes both custom and prescription, but is ordinarily applicable to trade, denoting the habits, modes, and course of dealing which are generally observed either in any particular branch of trade or in all mercantile transactions. Greenleaf.

Syn.—Custom is that which is done by many, or is often repeated; prescription is that which is often repeated and of long standing; the former is a law of nature, the latter is a law of men.

Prescription is a right acquired by long and immemorial use, or custom. An old or new custom; long-established usage; varying fashion; the law of prescription.—See CUSTOM, TREATMENT.

† Ū'SAG-ĒR (yū'zaj-ēr), n. One who has the use of any thing in trust for another. Daniel.

Ū'SANCE, n. [Fr.] 1. † Use. Spenser.

2. † Interest paid for money. Shak.
3. (Commercial Law.) The time which by usage or custom is allowed in certain countries for the payment of a bill of exchange. It means in some places a month, in others two or more months, and in others half a month. Burrill.

ŪSE (yūs, 118), n. [L. usus; utor, usus, to use; It. & Sp. uso; Fr. us.]

1. The act of employing any thing, or the state of being employed, for any purpose; application; employment; service.

Things may and must differ in their use; but yet they are all to be used according to the will of God. Law.

2. The quality that makes a thing proper for a purpose; benefit; utility; advantage; profit.

Rice is of excellent use for illnesses of the stomach that proceed from cold or moist humors. Temple.

When will my friendship be of use to thee? A. Phillips.

3. Need; necessity; occasion.

That done, I have no further use for life. A. Phillips.

4. Practice; customary act; exercise; habit.

He that first brought the word “aham,” “wheedle,” or “banter” in use put together as he thought fit those ideas he made it to stand for. Locke.

5. Custom; common occurrence. [R.]

O Cæsar, these things are beyond all use. Shak.

6. Interest paid for the use of money. [R.]

To pay duty and tribute, use and principal. Br. Taylor.

7. (Law.) In the law of estates, the profit or benefit of lands or tenements; the right to have the profit or benefit of lands or tenements; a confidence reposed in another who was made tenant of the land, that he should dispose of the land according to the intention of him to whose use it was granted, and suffer him to take the profits:—in the civil law, a right of receiving so much of the natural profits of a thing as is necessary for daily sustenance. Bouvier.

Contingent use, (Law.) a use limited to take effect upon some future contingent event:—otherwise called a future use, and sometimes, though inaccurately, a springing use. Burrill.—Resulting use, (Law.) a use which, having been limited by deed, express or cannot vest, but returns back to him who raised it after such expiration, or during such impossibility. Bouvier.—Shifting use, (Law.) a use which takes effect in substitution of some other estate, and is either limited by deed creating it or authorized to be created by some person named in it;—sometimes called a secondary use. Bouvier.—Statute of uses, (Law.) the statute of 27 Henry VIII., c. 10, which conveys uses into possession. Bouvier.

Syn.—See AVAIL, UTILITY.

ŪSE (yūs, 118), v. a. [L. utor, usus; It. usare; Sp. usar; Fr. user.] [2. USED; pp. USING, USED.]

1. To employ; to put to use; to apply; to avail one's self of; to act with or by means of.

They . . . could use both the right hand and the left in hurling stones and shooting arrows. 1 Chron. xii. 2.

2. To accustom; to habituate; to inure.

He that intends to gain the Olympic prize
Must use himself to hunger, heat, and cold. Roscommon.

3. To act or behave towards; to treat.

Why dost thou use me thus? Shak.

4. To practise customarily; to exercise.

Use hospitality one to another without grudging. 1 Pet. iv. 9.

5. To behave;—with the reflexive pronoun.

Pray forgive me, if I have used myself unmannerly. Shak.

To use up, to consume wholly:—to fatigue so as to make incapable of further exertion; to tire out; to fatigue out. [Vulgar.] Ruget.

Syn.—See EMPLOY.

ŪSE (yūs), v. n. 1. To be accustomed.

Thou shalt use thy captain upon a . . . Spenser.

2. To be wont; to be customarily.

Fears use to have accepted in such a fashion, as they rather . . . Bacon.

3. † To frequent; to inhabit. Milton.

Snakes that we within the house for shade Securely lurk. Mar.

ŪSE'FUL (yūs'fūl), a. Profitable; serviceable; beneficial; advantageous; conducive or helpful to any end; valuable for use; suited or adapted to the purpose; promoting the ends or objects in view. “Useful knowledge.” More.

Useful diligence will at last prevail. Johnson.

Syn.—ADVANTAGEOUS.

ŪSE'FUL-LY, ad. In a useful manner; profitably.

ŪSE'FUL-NESS, n. The state or the quality of being useful; utility; profit. Addison.

Syn.—See UTILITY.

A perfect vacuum, a space void of all matter, seems not to exist. . . . Whether there is any such thing in nature as an absolute vacuum, is a question which has been much debated. . . . Newton.

Torrucellian vacuum, the space above the mercury in the barometric tube, the most perfect vacuum that can be artificially produced. In this sense, vacuum merely signifies the exclusion of atmospheric air, for this space in the barometer is filled with the vapor of mercury at all temperatures above 60° Fahrenheit; and, if the undulatory theory of light is true, it contains luminiferous ether; and it may contain other media inappreciable by our senses. The vacuum producible by means of an air-pump is imperfect, it being impossible to exhaust all the air from a receiver. — See TORRICELLIAN. Brande. Young. Faraday.

Opening their valves, self-moved on either side, the adamantine doors expanded wide. Harte.

2. (Machinery.) A close lid, or other contrivance for closing an aperture or passage in such a manner as to allow a fluid to pass through that aperture only in one direction.

This air, by the opening of the valve and forcing up of the sucker, may be driven out. Boyle.

3. (Anat.) Any membrane, or duplicature of a membrane, which prevents a reflux of humors or other matters, in the vessels and canals of the animal body. Dunghson.

The arteries, with a contractile force, drive the blood still forward; it being hindered from going backward by the valves of the heart. Arbutnot.

Valves whose functions appear to be to retard or to modify the course of substances along canals, &c. Dunghson.

4. (Bot.) One of the pieces into which a dehiscent pod, or any similar body, splits. Gray.

5. (Conch.) One of the shells of a bivalve, or of the pieces of a multivalve shell. Brande.

Puppet valve, a cone, or frustum of a cone, fitted like a cover to a conical aperture, which it opens by rising, and closes by falling.—Rotary valve, a valve usually constructed like a common stopcock, except that it commands more than one passage at the same time. If the handle is placed in one position, it opens one passage, while it closes another; if in a different position, it closes the first, and opens the second.—Safety valve. See SAFETY-VALVE.—Shding valve, a valve which slides on or off its aperture. It sometimes has a cavity in its under side capable of connecting two apertures together while a third aperture is shut.—Throttle, a valve turning on an axis, and placed across the interior of a pipe, as the main steam pipe of a steam-engine. If turned edgewise, it permits the steam to pass, but if turned transversely, it obstructs the passage. Bugelow.

VÁLVED (válvd), a. Having valves. Arnott.

VÁLVE-SHÉLL, n. (Conch.) A fresh-water gastropod of the genus Valvata, of which there are several species. Woodward.

VÁLVLÉT, n. A little valve; a valvule. Smart.

VÁL'VU-LAR, a. (Bot.) Consisting of valves; valvate. Loudon.

VÁL'VÜLE, n. [Fr.] A valvlet. Johnson.

VÁM'BRÁCE, n. [Fr. avant-bras; avant, before, and bras, the arm.] (Plate Armor.) The piece which served as a protection to the arm below the elbow; vambrace. Brande.

Van to van the foremost squadron meet. Dryden.

2. A fan; an instrument for making a wind.

"They call it a corn van." [R.] Broome.

3. A wing with which the air is beaten.

He wheeled in air, and stretched his vans in vain; His vans no longer could his flight maintain. Dryden.

4. (Mining.) The process of sifting or cleansing ore by a shovel. [Local.] Simmonds.

5. A large, covered wagon used for transporting merchandise, &c. Simmonds.

VÁN, v. a. [Fr. vanmer;—from L. vannus, a fan.]

1. † To fan; to winnow. Bacon.

2. To cleanse, as tin-ore, by a shovel. Weale.

VÁN'A-DÁTE, n. (Chem.) Vanadate. Tre.

VÁN'Á'DI-ATE, n. A salt consisting of vanadic acid and a base. Graham.

VÁN'ÁD'IC, a. (Chem.) Noting a powerful, brownish-red, metallic acid, consisting of one equivalent of vanadium and three equivalents of oxygen. Miller.

At a red heat it fuses without further change, and crystallizes on cooling, becoming incandescent from the evolution of latent heat in the act of solidification. Miller.

VÁN'ÁD'I-NÍTE, n. (Min.) A brittle, subtranslucent or opaque mineral, of various colors, occurring in crystals, but commonly in implanted globules or incrustations, and consisting chiefly of vanadate of lead and chloride of lead. Dana.

VÁN'Á-DÍTE, n. (Chem.) A salt composed of vanadous acid and a base. Graham.

VÁN'Á'DI-ÜM, n. [Vanadis, a Scandinavian idol.] A rare metal, resembling chromium in its properties, of a steel-white lustre, very difficult of fusion, extremely brittle, a conductor of electricity, and at common temperatures not oxidized by air or by water. Miller. Graham.

VÁN'Á-DOÜS, a. (Chem.) Noting an acid consisting of one equivalent of vanadium and two equivalents of oxygen, and called also binoxide of vanadium, and vanadic oxide. Graham.

VAN'ITY, n. [L. vanitas; vanus, vain, empty; It. vanità; Sp. vanidad; Fr. vanité.]

1. The state of being vain; emptiness; uncertainty; inanity; worthlessness; futility.

Vanity of vanities; all is vanity. Eccles. i. 2.

I have seen all the works that are done under the sun, and, behold, all is vanity. Eccles. i. 14.

2. Fruitless endeavor; fruitless desire.

So am I made to possess months of vanity. Job vii. 3.

3. Trifling labor; fruitless toil. [R.]

To see long discourses against those things which are both vanity and sin, is to be judged a vanity in the answerer. Raleigh.

4. Empty pleasure; vain pursuit; idle show; unsubstantial enjoyment; petty object of pride.

Think not, when woman's transient breath is fled, That all her vanities at once are dead; Success dings; and she still regains. Pope.

5. Ostentation; vain or empty show. Raleigh.

6. Petty or empty pride; pride exerted upon slight grounds, or on small occasions; inflation of mind; conceit; conceitedness; self-conceit.

Pride makes us esteem ourselves; vanity makes us desire the esteem of others. It is just to say, as Dean Swift has done, that a man is too proud to be vain. Blair.

Every man has just as much vanity as he wants understanding. Pope.

Vanity is that species of pride, which, while it presumes on a degree of superiority in some particular articles, fondly courts the applause of every one within its sphere of action, seeking every occasion to display some talent or some supposed excellency. Cogswell.

Syn.—Vanity is manifested in a desire to attract notice, and gain admiration. It is somewhat allied to pride, and still more to conceit, conceitedness, self-conceit, self-praise, and self-commendation. Egotism is one form of vanity often manifested.—See ARROGANCE, PRIDE.

VAN'QUISH (vāng'kwish), v. a. [L. vincere; It. vincere; Sp. vincer; Fr. vaincre.] [i. VANQUISHED; pp. VANQUISHING, VANQUISHED.]

Be assured, madam, 't will be done With his next vantage. Shak.

† VAN'TAGE, v. a. To profit. Spenser.

VAN'TAGE-GROUND, n. Superiority in state or place; state or place in which one has better means of action than another. South.

VANT'BRACE, } n. [Fr. avant-bras.] Armor for VANT'BRASS, } the arm; vambrace. Shak.

† VAP, n. The lifeless part, as of wine.

In vain is it to wash a goblet, if you mean to put into it nothing but the dead lees and vap of wine. Ep. Taylor.

VAP'ID, a. [L. vapidus; vapor, vapor, steam.]

1. Having the spirit evaporated; dead; spiritless; tasteless; flat, as wine. Arbuthnot.

2. Dull; prosy; as, "A vapid discourse."

VAP'ID-ITY, n. Vapidness; flatness. Ch. Ob.

VAP'ID-LY, ad. In a vapid manner. Allen.

VAP'ID-NESS, n. The state of being vapid or spiritless; vapidness; flatness. Johnson.

VAP'OR, n. [L. vapor; It. vapore; Sp. vapor; Fr. vapeur.]

1. (Physics.) A term applied, in its most general sense, to all bodies existing in the aeriform state, but commonly, and more properly, restricted to substances existing in that state which are ordinarily in the liquid or the solid state; as, "Aqueous vapor"; "Mercurial vapor." Nichol.

2. "When liquids and certain solids are heated, they become converted into elastic fluids, or vapors, which differ from gases in this respect, that they are not, under common circumstances, permanently elastic, but resume the liquid or solid form when cooled down to ordinary temperatures." Brande.

2. A name sometimes limited to water in an aeriform state. Brande.

3. Fume; steam; mist; fog. Dryden.

4. Wind; flatulence. Bacon.

5. Mental fume; vain imagination.

It is a growing sickness; he hath the grace of melancholy vapor. Hammond.

6. pl. A term formerly much in vogue for a state of nervous debility and consequent depression of spirits, under which the images of the brain float with a sort of visible distinctness before the patient; hypochondriasis; spleen.

Syn.—Vapor is an elastic, aeriform fluid, into which liquids and certain solids are converted by heat; and it is often used in a limited sense to denote the water that exists in the atmosphere produced by evaporation. Steam is the vapor of water generated by heat raised to the boiling point. Gas is a term applied to all permanently elastic fluids or airs differing from atmospheric air. Paper and steam differ from gases in not being permanently elastic; but they resume the liquid or solid form when cooled down to the ordinary temperature. Some of the gases are highly inflammable. The vapor of the atmosphere; a vapor-bath; steam-engine, steam boat or vessel; oxygen or hydrogen gas; gas light.—See MIST.

VAP'OR, v. n. [L. vaporo.] [i. VAPORED; pp. VAPORING, VAPORED.]

VÄ'RI-A-BİL'ITY, n. Variableness. McCulloch.

VÄ'RI-A-BLE, a. [L. variabilis; varius, variegated; It. variabile; Sp. & Fr. variable.]

1. Changeable; capable of change or alteration; mutable; inconstant; fickle.

By the lively image of other creatures did those ancients represent the variable passions of mortals. Raleigh.

His heart I know how variable and vain. Milton.

2. (Math.) Noting quantities which are considered in a variable or changeable state, either increasing or decreasing. Hutton.

Variable motion, the motion of a body continually acted on by a force which changes or is different at every instant. Hutton.

Syn.—See CHANGEABLE.

VÄ'RI-A-BLE, n. (Math.) A name applied to quantities which admit of an infinite number of values in the same expression. Thus in the equation $x^2 + y^2 = R^2$, x and y are variables. Davies.

When there are several variables in the same equation, it is customary to consider all but one as independent variables, or variables to which values may be assigned at pleasure; the remaining one is called a function of the others, its value being dependent upon the values attributed to them. Some authors, instead of variable and constant quantities, use the terms fluent and stable quantities. Davies. Hutton.

VÄ'RI-A-BLE-NESS, n. 1. The quality of being variable; changeableness; mutability.

You are not solicitous about the variability of the weather or the change of seasons. Addison.

2. Levity; inconstancy; fickleness.

Censurers subject themselves to the charge of variability in judgment. S. Richardson.

VÄ'RI-A-BLY, ad. In a variable manner; changeably; mutably; inconstantly. Johnson.

2. An alteration; variation. [R.] Clarke.

3. (Law.) A disagreement or difference between two parts of the same legal proceeding, which ought to agree. Bowyer.

Variances are between the writ and the declaration, and between the declaration and the evidence. Bowyer.

At variance, in disagreement; in a want of agreement; in dispute; in dissension; in controversy.

VÁ-RI-ANT, a. Variable; inconstant; fickle. [Used in Scotland, and sometimes in Eng. and the U. S.] Jamieson. Gent. Mag. Longfellow.

And men were found of nature variant. Chaucer.
Though the forms of belief may be somewhat variant. Sears.

VÁ-RI-ÁTE, v. a. [L. vario, variatus.] To change; to alter; to vary.

This artificial change is but a fixation of nature's inconstancy, helping its varying infirmities. By. Taylor.

Thus old word is sometimes used in America, particularly by clergymen; but it is regarded as obsolete in England. Pickering.

VÁ-RI-Á-TION, n. [L. variatio; It. variazione; Sp. variacion; Fr. variation.]

1. The act of varying; change; alteration; mutation; difference at different times.

The perpetual variations of our speech. Swift.

2. A deviation; departure; difference.

He observed the variation of our English from the original, and made an entire translation of the whole for his private use. Fell.

3. (Gram.) A change of termination.

The rules of grammar, and the peculiarities of words and the peculiarities of their use, are to be repeated. Watts.

4. (Mus.) A reproduction of the essential features of a melody or theme in a more fanciful or florid form. Dwight.

5. (Astron.) A periodic irregularity in the motion of the moon, arising from the action of the sun. Herschel.

The extent of fluctuation to and fro in the moon's longitude which it produces, is not less than one degree and four minutes. It was discovered by Aboul Wefa, an Arabian astronomer, about the year 975, and was the first inequality produced by perturbation which Newton succeeded in explaining by the theory of gravitation. Herschel.

6. (Magnetism.) The angle formed by the direction assumed by a compass-needle and a meridian line on a horizontal plane; the angle formed by the terrestrial meridian and the magnetic meridian; the deviation or declination of the magnetic needle, when poised with liberty of horizontal motion, from the true meridian. Young.

The variation of the magnetic needle is not constant for the same place. At Paris, in 1663, the needle pointed due north; previously to that time the variation had been easterly, since then it has been westerly, increasing till 1814, when it was more than 22½ degrees. It then began slowly to decrease. The variation of the needle is also subject to daily fluctuations connected with the function of solar heat, and called diurnal variation. The diurnal range sometimes amounts to twenty-five minutes. Lardner.

Calculus of variations, (Math.) a branch of the higher mathematics, by which an expression or function being given, containing two or more variable quantities, whose relation is expressed by a determinate law, it is found what that function becomes, when the law itself is supposed to experience any variation indefinitely small, occasioned by the variation of one or of several of the terms which express that law. Hutton.

Variation of curvature, (Math.) the rate at which the curvature of any curve is varied, that of the circle excepted, which is constant. Hutton.

Syn.—Variation is the act of varying; variety, the quality of varying, or the thing varied. The variation of the seasons; variety of productions; a diversity of employments and opinions.—See CHANGE, DIFFERENCE, VARIETY.

Syn.—See CHANGEABLE.

Syn. — See DIFFER.

VARY, n. Change; alteration. Shal.

VAS'CU-LAR, a. [L. vasculum, dim. of vas, a vessel; It. vascolare, vascular; Sp. vasculoso; Fr. vasculaire.] 1. Pertaining to the vessels of an animal or vegetable body, — in the animal body to arterial, venous, or lymphatic vessels, but generally to blood-vessels only. Duglison. Gray.

Bichat gave the name vascular system to the blood-vessels, and of these he made two divisions. Duglison.

2. Containing vessels; consisting of ducts.

The distinct class of vascular, flowerless plants. Gray.

Vascular plants, (Bot.) a term applied to plants constituting one of De Candolle's two grand divisions of the vegetable kingdom, comprising all plants, whether herbs, shrubs, or trees, which have vascular and woody tissues in their composition; — called also vascular, and used in contradistinction to cellular plants, which are entirely composed of cellular tissue, strictly so called, and constitute De Candolle's other grand division. Gray. London. — Vascular system, (Anat.,) the blood-vessels, arterial and venous. Duglison. — (Bot.) Those interior portions of any plant in which vessels or ducts occur. The vascular system, in an exogenous stem, is confined to the space between the pith and bark, where it chiefly consists of ducts and pitted or woody tissue, collected into compact, wedge-shaped vertical plates, the edges of which rest on the pith and bark, and the sides of which are in contact with the medullary rays. In endogenous plants, the vascular system is distributed in the cellular tissue, in the form of transverse, seldom having any tendency to collect into zones or wedges resembling wood. Henslow. Lindley. — Vascular tissue, (Bot.) a name applied to transformations of cells forming ducts, as spiral ducts, annular ducts, &c. Gray.

VAS-CU-LAR'ES, n. pl. (Bot.) Phanogamous, cotyledonous, or vascular plants. Wood.

VAS-CU-LAR'ITY, n. The state or the quality of being vascular. Duglison.

VAS-CU-LIF'ER-ŌUS, a. [L. vasculum, a small vessel, and fero, to bear; Sp. vasculifero.] (Bot.) Having seed-vessels divided into cells. Quincy.

VASE, or VASE [vaz, W. P. J. F. Sm. R.; vās, S. E. K. C. O. Wb. Scott; vāz or vāz, Ja.], n. [L. vas, a vessel; It. & Sp. vaso; Fr. vase.]

1. A vessel used for domestic purposes, or in sacred ceremonies; an urn-shaped vessel, in general rather for show than for use.

The toilet stands unveiled,
Each silver vase in mystic order laid. Pope.

2. A piece of ornamental marble. Johnson.

3. (Bot.) The calyx of a plant. Wright.

4. (Arch.) A name given to the central part or main bulk of the Corinthian and Composite capitals, and also to a portion of a cupola; — called also tambour, and drum; — an ornament of sculpture placed on socles and pediments, representing such vessels as the ancients used in sacrificial. Britton. Buchanan.

“Mr. Sheridan has pronounced this word so as to rhyme with base, care, &c. I have uniformly heard it pronounced with the s like z, and sometimes, by people of refinement, with the a like aw; but this, being too refined for the general ear, is now but seldom heard. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Dr. Kenrick,

W. Johnston, Mr. Smith, Mr. Perry, and Buchanan pronounce the a long and slender, as I have done, but with the s as in case; Mr. Smith and W. Johnston give the a the same sound, and the s the sound of z; and Mr. Elphinstone sounds it as if written vaz, but this, as Mr. Nares justly observes, is an affected pronunciation.” Walker.

VASE'-SHAPED, a. Resembling a common flower-pot without its rim. Henslow.

VAS'U-FORM-TIS'SUE, n. (Bot.) Tissue consisting of tubes which appear, when viewed by transmitted light, as if riddled full of holes, — but which are found, upon more accurate inspection, to derive that appearance from their sides being filled with little pits sunk in the thickness of the lining; — called also pitted tissue, dotted ducts, and bothrenchyma. Lindley.

VAS'SAL, n. [Low L. vassallus; It. vassallo; Sp. vasallo; Fr. vassal. — From the Welsh gwās, a young man or page; gwāsath, the state of pagehood, being rendered in Latin vasaticum. Sir F. Palgrave.]

1. (Feudal Law.) The grantee of a fief, feud, or fee; one who holds of a superior or lord; a feudal tenant; a feudatory. Burritt.

Every petty prince, vassal to the emperor, can own what money he pleases. Swift.

2. A subject; a dependent; a retainer.

The common people were vassals to the king, not vassals to the king. Davies.

3. One who acts by the will of another; one who attends another; a servant; a valet.

I am his fortune's vassal, and I send him
The greatness he has got. Shal.

4. A slave; a bondman; a political servitor.

Thou swear'st thy gods in vain,
Or vassal miscreant! Shal.

VAS'SAL, v. a. To subject; to enslave. Feltham.

VAS'SAL, a. Servile; subservient. Watts.

1. Any large vessel, but particularly one in which liquors are kept while immature; — a cistern for tanners or brewers; fat. Phillips.

2. (Mining.) A wooden tub used for washing ores and mineral substances in. Watson.

3. A measure of capacity, particularly the legal liquid measure of Belgium and Holland, containing 20.01 imperial gallons. Simmonds.

The shipping vat weighs 2204.74 lbs. The old London coal vat contained nine bushels. The solid measurement vat of Amsterdam contains forty cubic feet; the wine vat 241.57 gallons, and the vat for olive oil, 225.45 gallons.

VAT'U-CAN, n. An assemblage of buildings near the church of St. Peter's, in Rome, including the Papal palace, the court and garden of Belvidere, the library, which is the richest in Europe in manuscripts, and the museum, which is unequalled in the world. P. Cye.

The name Vatican is derived, according to Aulus Gellius, from vaticinium, prophecy; or rather from an ancient oracular deity of the Latins, called by the Romans Jupiter Vaticanus, who was worshipped there. Brande.

VAT'U-CAN-IST, n. An adherent to the pope, who sometimes resides in the Vatican. Ec. Rev.

VAT'U-CIDE, n. [L. vates, a prophet, and cedo, to kill.] The murder, or the murderer, of a prophet. Pope.

VAT'U-CIN-AL, a. Relating to, or containing, predictions; foretelling. Warton.

VAT'U-CIN-ATE, v. n. [L. vaticinor, vaticinatus, to foretell; vates, a prophet.] [i. VATICINATED; pp. VATICINATING, VATICINATED.] To prophesy; to foretell. [R.] Howell.

VAT'U-CINE, n. A prediction. Holland.

VAUDEVILLE } (vōd'vil), n. [Fr. vaudeville. —

VAUDEVIL. } The origin of this word is disputed; some derive it from Vau-de-vire, a village in Normandy. Brande.]

1. A current street song; a ballad; a trivial strain. Trévoux. Johnson.

2. (French Poetry.) A species of light song, frequently of a satirical turn, consisting of several couplets, and a refrain or burden, introduced into theatrical pieces; — a short comic piece interspersed with such songs. Brande.

VAUDOIS (vō-dwā'), n. sing. & pl. [Fr.] An inhabitant, or the inhabitants, of some valleys in the Alps, between Italy and Provence, celebrated for their religious opinions, and the persecution to which, in consequence, they have been subjected. Brande.

The Vaudois must be distinguished from the Waldenses, or followers of Peter Waldo, who acquired celebrity in the twelfth century, and from whom some writers have deduced both their religious tenets and their appellation also. Brande.

VÁULT [vawlt, W. P. J. E. F. Ja. Sm. C. Wb.; vawlt, S.; vawlt or vawt, K.], n. [Low L. voluta, volvo, volutus, to roll; It. volta; Fr. volte.]

1. (Arch.) An arched ceiling or roof. Britton.

The arch of a bridge is, strictly speaking, a vault; and a cupola is another of the simpler kind of vaults. When two or more vaults intersect each other, they produce a groined vault. Britton.

2. An underground apartment generally used as a store for wine and other things not injured by damp; a cellar; a cavity. Simmonds.

The wine of life is past, and the mere lees
Is left this vault to brag of. Shal.

3. A cave; a cavern; a cell. Sandys.

4. A repository for the dead; a tomb or crypt.

Shall I not be staid in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no wholesome air breathes in? Shal.

5. A leap; a jump; a bound. Johnson.

6. (Man.) The bounding turn which riders teach their horses; a curvet; — the turn or flexure in which men throw themselves on or off their horses. Cotgrave. Junius.

“Mr. Sheridan leaves out the l in this word, in the word vault, to leap, and all their compounds; but my ear grossly deceives me if this l is ever suppressed, except in the sense of a cellar for wine, &c. In this l am supported by all our orthoepists from whom the sounds of the letter can be gathered; and Mr. Scott and Mr. Perry preserve the l in every word of this form. This, I think, is not agreeable to general usage with respect to the exception I have given; though I think it might be dispensed with for the sake of uniformity, especially as the Old French volte, the Italian volta, and the Lower Latin voluta, from which the word is derived, have all of them the l; nor do I think the preservation of it in the word in question would incur the least imputation of pedantry.” Walker.

VÁULT, v. a. [L. volvo, volutus, to roll, to turn about; Old Fr. voulter; Fr. vouter.] [i. VAULTED; pp. VAULTING, VAULTED.] To arch; to shape to a vault; to cover with an arch.

Hath nature given them eyes
To see this vaulted arch? Shal.

Over head the dismal hiss
Of vaulting flames in flaming vaults of fire. Milton.

And, flying, vaulted with a dust with fire.

VĖ-BRĀ'TION, n. [L. vibratio; It. vibrazione; Sp. vibracion; Fr. vibration.]

1. The act of vibrating; oscillation.
2. (Physics.) A regular reciprocal motion, or motion to and fro, of a body or parts of a body, or of particles of an elastic medium, as of a pendulum, a stretched cord, or of particles of air in the production of sound. Hutton.
3. (Mus.) A regular reciprocal motion of a body, as of a string or cord, which, suspended or stretched between two fixed points, swings or shakes to and fro. Brande.

Writers on mechanics, instead of vibration, often use the term oscillation, especially when speaking of a body, as a pendulum, that swings or vibrates by its own gravity.

Amplitude of vibration, the maximum excursion, or departure from a position of rest, of a vibrating body or particle. The intensity of sound yielded by a vibrating cord, and, according to the undulatory theory, the intensity of light, depend on the amplitude of the vibrations by which the sound and light are caused. Hutton. Lloyd.—Phase of vibrations, a term used in reference to the vibrations of the particles of a wave of an elastic or liquid medium, which are said to be in the same phase when they are moving in the same direction. The particles in any one phase, though moving in the same direction, have different velocities. Nichol.

Syn.—Vibration is a movement to and fro caused by elasticity; oscillation, one caused by gravitation. The vibration of a fiddle-string; the oscillation of a pendulum.

VĪ'AR, n. [L. vicarius; vicis, change; It. & Sp. vicario; Fr. vicaire.]

1. One who performs the functions of another; a substitute in office; a deputy; a proxy. [R.] When St. Paul sent for Timothy from Ephesus, he sent Ty-chicus to be his vicar. Sp. Taylor.

2. (Ecol.) The incumbent of a benefice, where some or all of the tithes are either appropriate or inappropriate. Eden.

☞ "The office of vicar owes its origin to the appropriation of benefices to monasteries and other religious houses of old. These benefices the monks served by some of their own holy, until the bishops subsequently obliged them to establish secular priests in them, in order to serve the cures. These priests were at first no more than the curates or deputies of the appropriators, and were therefore called vicars; their stipend was solely at the discretion of the appropriator. The attention of the legislature was, in the course of time, directed to this state of things, and acts were passed endowing the vicar with a portion of the tithes, and making his office perpetual." Eden.

Apostolical vicar, in the Roman Catholic Church, an officer of high standing, who performs the functions of the pope in a province committed to his direction. Ungit.—Vicars of the empire, in the German constitution, princes who had the right of representing the empire in case of absence or interregnum. Brande.

VIGOR-ŌUS-NESS, n. The state or the quality of being vigorous; force; strength. Bp. Taylor.

VĪKING, n.; pl. VĪKINGS. [A. S. vicing, a pirate.] One of the pirates, among the Northmen, who infested the European seas in the eighth, ninth, and tenth centuries. Longfellow.

“Viking and sea-king are not synonymous, although, from the common termination in king, the words are used, even by our historians, indiscriminately. The sea-king was a man connected with a royal race, either of the small kings of the country, or of the Haarfager family, and who by right received the title of king as soon as he took the command of men, although only of a single ship's crew, and without having any land or kingdom. The viking is a word not connected with the word kongr, or king. Vikings were mainly pirates, alternately peasants and pirates, deriving the name of viking from the vicks, wicks, or inlets on the coast in which they harbored with their long ships or rowing galleys. Every sea-king was a viking, but every viking was not a sea-king.” S. Laing.

VILL, n. [L. villa; Fr. vill.] (Eng. Law.) A manor: — a tithing: — a town: — a township: — a parish: — a part of a parish: — a village. Blackstone. Cowell. Speelman. Burritt.

In modern English law, a vill may include several parishes, and a parish several manors; although a parish may now contain several vills. Burritt.

VILL-A, n. [L.] A country house; a rural mansion or residence; a manor. Pope.

VILLAGE, n. [It. villaggio; Sp. village; Fr. village; — from L. villa, a country house.] A small collection of houses in the country, smaller than a town or a city, and larger than a hamlet.

There were three villages except the village of these, which were the village of the village. Goldsmith.

Syn. — See TOWN.

VILLAGE-R, n. An inhabitant of a village. Shak.

VILLAGE-RY, n. District of villages. “The maidens of the villager.” [R.] Shak.

VILLAIN (vī'lān), n. [Low L. villanus; L. villa, a country house, a farm; It. & Sp. villano; Old Fr. villain; Fr. villain. — Skinner and some others incline to refer its origin to L. vīls, vile.]

1. (Old Eng. Law.) One who held lands by a base tenure; a villain. — See VILLEIN. Davies.

I'll pay him forty lives by the year.

Villain or clerk, nor think the bargain dear. Way.

2. A vile or base person; a rascal; a rogue; a scoundrel; a scamp; a knave. — See KNAVE.

O, villain! villain! his very opinion in the letter. Abhorred villain! unnatural, detested, brutish villain! Shak.

The villain is first the serf or peasant (villanus), because attached to the villa or farm; 2dly, the peasant, who, it is taken for granted, will be churlish, selfish, dishonest, and of evil moral conditions. At the third step, nothing of the meaning which the etymology suggests, nothing of villa, survives any longer; the peasant is quite dismissed, and the evil moral conditions of him who is called by this name alone remain. Trench.

The word villain, in its different senses, and the class of words connected with it, are often spelt differently. There is an inconsistency in the orthography of them, which has been caused, in part, by the orthography of the different words in other languages from which they are derived; and this inconsistency it is difficult to remove. The principal English dictionaries give the orthography of the four most important words of this class thus: villain, villanage, villanous, villany. But, in the works which treat of feudal times and customs, law dictionaries, encyclopædies, &c., two of these words are spelt thus: villain, villanage; and this orthography seems to be that which is best authorized, when used with reference to feudal manners and customs.

VILLAIN (vī'lān), a. Villanous. [R.] Shak.

VILLAIN-ŌUS, a. See VILLANOUS.

VILLAIN-Y, n. See VILLANY.

VIN'E-GAR, n. [Fr. vinagre; vin, wine, and aigre, sour.]

1. A very dilute acetic acid, mixed with various impurities of vegetable origin. It rarely contains more than five per cent. of acetic acid.

Vinegar may be prepared by various methods from fermented or fermentable liquors. That which is most esteemed for culinary purposes is prepared from wine, and is extensively manufactured in France from the ascendant varieties of wine. It is also prepared by the oxidation of alcohol, from infusion of malt, from weak solutions of sugar, from mixtures of starch with yeast, and from cider. Malt vinegar is chiefly used in England for domestic purposes.

Miller.

2. Any thing sour.

Shak.

Aromatic vinegar, a solution of the oil of cloves, lavender, rosemary, and calamus, in highly concentrated acetic acid. It is an exceedingly pungent perfume, producing a strongly excitant impression when snuffed up the nostrils. — Marseilles vinegar, or Thuey's vinegar, a preparation consisting essentially of vinegar impregnated with aromatic substances; — formerly esteemed a prophylactic against the plague and other contagious diseases. Wood & Baché. — Mother of vinegar, a name applied to loose aggregates of acetylenous plants (Utrina aceti), of extremely simple organization, developed in vinegar. It begins its growth as a thin pellicle, seen under the microscope to consist of small globules, and finally presents a gelatinous and fucoid appearance. When this substance is immersed in a solution of sugar or treacle, it soon converts the liquid into vinegar. Baird. — Radical vinegar, acetic acid. Ure. — Vinegar of Saturn, a solution of acetate of lead. Ure.

VÍ'OL, n. [It. viola; Fr. viole. — Richardson suggests, "Low L. vitula, vidula, viella, perhaps formed upon the L. fidecula, the dim. of fides, a stringed instrument."]

1. (Mus.) A stringed instrument of the earlier times of modern music, having five or six strings regulated by frets, played with a bow, and resembling the violin, of which it was the origin; — the general name for instruments of the violin family, comprising the violin, the viola, the violoncello, contra-basso, bass-viol, &c. Dwight.
2. (Naut.) A purchase used occasionally in weighing anchor: — written also voyl. Brande.

VÍ'Ó'LA, n. [It.] (Mus.) A stringed instrument resembling the violin in every respect but that it is larger, ranging a fifth lower, and playing the tenor part (between the second violin and the violoncello) in the harmony; the tenor-viol; — also sometimes called the alto-viol, and among Germans, the brutsche. Dwight.

Viol the name viola di braccio — the viol of the arm. the arm-viol — is applied to this instrument to distinguish it from a larger instrument, now out of use, which was called a viola da gamba, — the viol of the leg, the leg-viol, — and which supplied the place of our present violoncello, and also to distinguish it from still another instrument, called viola da spalla, — the viol of the shoulder, the shoulder-viol, — an instrument which was smaller than the viola da gamba, about midway between it and the viola di braccio, and which was appropriate to the tenor, and thus was a sort of tenor-viol; while the viola di braccio, or alto-viol, belonged rather to the alto. In the appropriation of instruments to particular parts which is current at the present period, the so-called alto-viol is applied also to the third voice or part (the tenor), and thus is in a manner no longer an alto, but a tenor-viol. — The word viola, or viol, seems to be the general name of all stringed instruments of a similar form to that of the violin. The names of all these instruments are merely diminutives and augmentatives of the word viola; as, e. g., violino, or violin; violone, or double-bass viol; violoncello, or bass-viol; viuletta, a small alto-viol. Warner.

VÍ'Q-LÁ-BLE, a. [L. violabilis; It. violabile.] That may be injured or violated.

W. Smith.

VÍ'Q-LÁ'CEOUS (vi-o-lá'shūs), a. [L. violaceus; viola, the violet.] Resembling violets, or consisting of violets, violet-colored.

VOL-CÄN'IC, a. [It. vulcanico; Fr. volcanique.] Pertaining to a volcano; partaking of the nature of, or produced, or affected by, a volcano. Lyell.

† Volcanic bombs, detached masses of molten matter ejected into the air and assuming a rounded form, and often elongated into a pear-shape as they fall. — Volcanic foci, subterranean centres of action in volcanoes, where the heat is supposed to be in the highest degree of energy. Lyell. — Volcanic glass, (Min.) a mineral consisting of lava which has become glassy by sudden cooling, sometimes composed of feldspar, sometimes of a mixture of feldspar and augite, with chrysolite and much iron, or of augite and chrysolite, or labradorite, &c., — called also obsidian. — Volcanic rocks, (Geol.) a division of rocks which have been produced at, or near the surface of the earth by the action of fire or subterranean heat. They are for the most part unstratified, and are devoid of fossils. — Volcanic buff, a substance produced by the showering down from the air, or incumbent waters, of sand and cinders, first shot up from the interior of the earth by the explosion of volcanic gases. Lyell.

VÖL-CA-NÏC'I-TY, n. Volcanism. Sabine.

VÖL'CA-NÏSM, n. The action of fire or heat in the interior of the earth which produces volcanoes. I designate the whole of these phenomena by the general name of volcanism. De la Beche.

VÖL'CA-NÏST, n. 1. One versed in the knowledge or science of volcanoes. Knappes.

2. One who believes in the effects of volcanic eruptions in the formation of mountains. Wright.

VÖL-CÄN'I-TY, n. State of being volcanic. Clarke.

VÖL-CA-NÏ-ZÄ'TION, n. The act of subjecting to volcanic action. Clarke.

VÖL'CA-NÏZE, v. a. To subject to the influence of volcanic action. Maunder.

VÖL-CÄNÖ, n.; pl. VÖL-CÄNÖES. [It. from Vulcan (L. Vulcanus), the god of fire.] A mountain or hill of conical shape, having at the top a cup-shaped depression, called the crater, from which issue occasionally flame and sulphurous acid and other gases, with jets of steam, and from which, at times, ashes are thrown up high into the air, or currents of melted rock or lava burst forth and pour down the sides. Ansted.

There are in the world perhaps two hundred volcanoes. Those with the effects of which we are best acquainted are, Hecia in Iceland, Etna in Sicily, and Vesuvius in Italy. Volcanoes are also thought to exist in the moon of far greater power and magnitude than those of the earth. Davis.

VÖLE, n. [Fr. from L. volo, to fly.]

1. A deal at cards, that draws all the tricks.

I might by this have won a vole. Swift.

2. (Zool.) An animal of the genus Arvicola of several species, the best known of which is the water-vole, or water-rat (Arvicola amphibius of Demarest). Eng. Cyc. Baird.

VÖLE, v. n. To win all the tricks at cards. Pope.

VÖLÉE' (vö-lä'), n. [Fr.] (Mus.) A rapid flight of notes. Moore.

VÖ'LENS NÖ'LENS. [L.] Willing or not willing. — See NÖLENS VÖLENS. Hamilton.

VÖL'E-RY, n. [L. volo, to fly; Fr. volerie.] 1. A flight of birds. [R.] Locke.

2. A bird-cage large enough for birds to fly about in; a volary. Locke.

† VÖL'I-TÄ-BLE, a. Evaporating; volatile; changeable. "Volatile spirit." Hopkins.

VÖL-I-TÄ'TION, n. [L. volito, volatus, to fly.] The act or the power of flying. Browne.

VÖL'I-TION (vö-lish'un), n. [L. volo, to will, — akin to Sansc. var. to choose; Gr. βούλωμαι, to will; Goth. vilja, to will. Wm. Smith. — It. volizione; Sp. volicion; Fr. volition.] 1. The act of willing or exercising the will.

Volition is an act of the mind by which the will is exerted. It is the power of choosing. Johnson.

2. The power of willing or choosing. Johnson.

VÖL'I-TÏVE, a. 1. Having the power to will.

They not only perfect the intellectual faculty, but the volitive; making the man not only more knowing, but more wise and better. Hale.

2. Expressing a volition or act of the will; as, "A volitive sentence." A. Crosby.

VÖL'LEY (völ'le), n. [L. volo, to fly; Fr. volée.] 1. A flight of shot; a rapid emission or discharge of shot from guns.

A volley of shot slew two of his company. Raleigh.

2. An emission of many at once; a burst.

A fine volley of words, gentlemen. Shak.

Rattling nonsense in full volleys breaks. Pope.

VÖL'LEY, v. a. [i. VOLLEYED; pp. VOLLEYING, VOLLEYED.] To discharge at, or throw out, as with a volley; — used with out. [R.] Shak.

VÖL'LEY, v. n. To discharge at once. Shak.

VÖL'LEYED (völ'hd), a. Discharged with a volley. "The blasting volleyed thunder." Milton.

† VÖL'ÖW, v. a. [From the answer volo in the baptismal service.] To baptize; — applied contemptuously by the Reformers. Tyndale.

VÖLT, n. [L. volvo, volutus, to roll or turn about; Fr. volte.] 1. (Man.) A round or a circular tread; a gait of two treads made by a horse going sideways round a centre, so that these two treads of the fore and the hind feet make parallel tracks. Far. Dict.

2. (Fencing.) A leap to avoid a thrust. Smart.

VÖL'TÄ, n.; pl. VÖL'TE (völ'tä). [It.] (Mus.) Time; — as in the phrases, "Prima volta" (first time); "Seconda volta" (second time). Warner.

VÖL-TÄ'IC, a. [From Volta, the name of an eminent Italian electrician.] (Elec.) Noting or relating to currents of electricity generated by chemical action, in contradistinction to magneto-electric, thermo-electric, and induced currents, and to Franklinian electricity, and to animal electricity; volta-electric; galvanic. Faraday.

† Some writers attribute the voltaic current to the contact of dissimilar metals.

Voltaic battery, an instrument, variously constructed, for generating an electric current, and usually consisting of two or more plates or cylinders of dissimilar metals, arranged in juxtaposition in a single pair, or alternately in a series of connected pairs, each pair being immersed in a saline or acid liquid, which acts chemically on one metal and not on the other; and the whole combination is connected by a wire or other conductor, a complete voltaic circuit traversed by an electric current; galvanic battery; voltaic or galvanic circle. It is said to be simple or compound, according as the dissimilar metals constitute a single pair or a series of pairs. In Bunsen's voltaic battery, the metal not chemically acted on is replaced by carbon. — Constant voltaic battery, a battery which has its two metals immersed in two different liquids separated from each other by a porous partition, and which affords, for a considerable period of time, an electric current of nearly uniform strength. — Voltaic pile, a kind of battery, invented by Volta, in which, instead of a saline or acid liquid, pieces of cloth or card moistened with such a liquid are used. — Poles of the voltaic battery, the terminal surfaces of the two metallic conductors of the voltaic circuit in contact with the electrolyte in the decomposing cell; the surface connected with the conducting-plate of the battery being called the positive pole, the positive electrode, zincode, or zincoid; and the surface connected with the generating plate being called the negative pole, negative electrode, platnode, and chloroid; — the two connected plates of two different cells of a compound battery; the generating plate being called the zincous pole, and the conducting plate being called the chlorous pole; — the two plates or cylinders of a simple voltaic circle. Graham. — Voltaic arc, the arc of flame, of dazzling brilliancy and intense heat, accompanying the disruptive discharge of a powerful voltaic battery between two charcoal points or other conductors connected with its two terminal cells. Sir H. Davy, with a battery consisting of two thousand pairs of plates, obtained an arc four inches in length. — Simple voltaic circle, a combination of a single pair of two dissimilar metallic plates and a liquid acting chemically on one of them, or of two different liquids and one metallic plate, arranged so as to form a voltaic circuit. — Compound voltaic circle, a combination of a series of pairs of dissimilar metals and a liquid acting chemically on one of the metals, arranged so as to form a voltaic circuit; compound voltaic battery. — Voltaic circuit, a name applied to the plates of a voltaic battery, the liquids in which the plates are immersed, and the wire or other medium of communication between the terminal plates of the battery — all of which, combined together, constitute the conductor through which the voltaic current circulates. — Voltaic current, a continuous electric current set in motion by a voltaic battery; a continuously transmitted electrical force developed by a voltaic battery. — Voltaic decomposition, the decomposition of a chemical compound, as water, by means of voltaic electricity. — Voltaic induction, the induction, by a voltaic current, of a momentary secondary current of electricity in a contiguous conductor, when the voltaic current begins to flow or ceases to flow, and when its intensity changes. — Voltaic endosmose, the passage of the liquid of a decomposing cell, connected with a voltaic battery, and divided into two chambers by a permeable diaphragm of wet bladder or porous earthen ware, from the chamber containing the positive terminal plate into the chamber containing the negative terminal plate, the liquid rising sometimes several inches in the latter above its level in the former. — Voltaic magnet, a rod, or piece of soft iron, rendered temporarily magnetic by a voltaic current transmitted through a helix of wire surrounding it; electro-magnet. — Voltaic protection of metals, the protection of a negative metal from the solvent action of saline and acid liquids by association with more positive metal — iron, for instance, by zinc, as in articles of galvanized iron, which are coated by the former metal. Faraday. Miller. Graham.

VÖL'TÄ-ÏSM, n. A peculiar form of electric agency, including all those electrical phenomena which arise from the chemical reactions of certain metals with different fluids; galvanism; — the branch of science which treats of this form of electricity. Library of Useful Knowledge.

VÖL'TÄ-ÏTE, n. (Min.) An opaque, crystalline mineral, of resinous lustre, consisting of protosulphate of iron, persulphate of iron, and water. Dana.

VÖL-TÄM'E-TER, n. (Elec.) An instrument, of various forms, invented by Faraday, for measuring the chemical decomposing action of a voltaic current, which is constant for a constant quantity of electricity. Faraday.

† The voltammeter consists of a decomposing cell, making a part of a voltaic circuit, and measuring the power of that circuit by the quantity of water decomposed, as shown by the quantity of its component gases, oxygen and hydrogen, collected. Faraday.

VÖL'TÄ-PLÄST, n. A name given to that form of galvanic battery which is adapted to the electrotrope. Francis.

VÖL'TÄ-TÏPE, n. Electrotrope. Miller.

VÖL'TÏ. [It., turn over.] (Mus.) A direction to turn over a leaf. Moore.

Volte subito, turn over quickly.

VÖL-TÏ-GEUR' (völ tē-zhūr'), n. [Fr.; voltegeur, vaulting.] 1. A vaulter; a tumbler. Surenne.

2. (Mil.) A light horseman or dragon. Sim.

VOLT'ZINE, } n. (Mfn.) An opaque or sub-VOLT'ZITE, } translucent mineral occurring in implanted spherical globules, and consisting of sulphide of zinc and oxide of zinc. Dana.

VQ-LŪ'BI-LATE, a. (Bot.) Voluble. Smart.

VŌL'Ū-BILE, a. (Bot.) Twining. Clarke.

VŌL-U-BĪL'I-TY, n. [L. volubilitas; It. volubilità; Sp. volubilidad; Fr. volubilité.]
1. The act or the power of rolling.
Volubility, or aptness to roll, is the property of a bowl. Watts.

2. Activity or rapidity of speech; fluency.
He expressed himself with great volubility of words, natural and proper. Clarendon.

3. Changeableness; mutability; inconstancy.
"Volubility of human affairs." L'Estrange.

VŌL'U-BLE (vŏl'ū-bl), a. [L. volubilis; volvo, volutus, to roll, It. volubile; Sp. & Fr. voluble.]
1. Formed so as to roll, or so as to be easily put in motion. "Voluble particles." Boyle.

2. Rolling, having quick motion.
This less voluble earth. Milton.

3. Nimble; active; — applied to the tongue.
A voluble and flippant tongue. Watts.

4. Rapid or fluent of words.
If voluble and sharp discourse be marred. Shak.
Cassio, a knave very voluble. Shak.

5. (Bot.) Twining, as the stem of hops and beans. Gray.

VŌL'U-BLE-NESS, n. The quality of being voluble; volubility. Ash.

VŌL'U-BLY, ad. In a voluble manner. Hudibras.

VŌL'UME (vŏl'yum) [vŏl'yūm, W. J. Ja.; vŏl'yūm, S. K.; vŏl'yūm, P. E. Wb.], n. [L. volumen, a roll; volvo, volutus, to roll; It. volume; Sp. volumen; Fr. volume.]
1. A roll of writing, which was the old form of a book; an ancient book which consisted of a sheet wound round a staff. Brande.

2. As much as is convolved at once; a roll; a coil; a convolution; a wreath; a fold.
So glide some trodden serpent on the grass,
And long behind his wounded volume trails. Dryden.

3. Bulk; size; dimensions; space occupied.
Our language takes from the French a sense of which the Latin knows nothing; and volume means bulk, size, or solid content. P. Cyc.

4. A swelling body, as a wave of water.
Th' volume 'twixtful tides

Slow through the vale, in salt or volume play. Fenton.

5. A book; tome. "One short volume." Swift.
A library is said to consist of so many thousand volumes, and a long work is divided for convenience into several volumes. Brande.

6. (Mus.) Quantity or fulness. Warner.
Volume of a body, the number of cubic units, as cubic inches, cubic feet, &c., which a body contains; solidity. Davies.

VŌL'UMED (vŏl'yūmd), a. Forming volumes or rolling masses; having the form of a roll.
With volumed smoke that slowly grew
To one white sky of sulphurous hue. Byron.

VQ-LŪ'MI-NOUS, a. [L. voluminosus; It. & Sp. voluminoso; Fr. volumineux.]
1. Full of windings, bendings, or folds; consisting of many coils or complications.
The serpent rolled voluminous and vast. Milton.

2. Consisting of many volumes. Gravitt.

3. Of great volume or size; large; bulky.
Why, though I seem of a prodigious waist,
I am not so voluminous and vast. B. Jonson.

4. Having written much or many volumes.
"A voluminous writer." Spectator.

5. Copious; diffusive; prolix. [R.]
[He] was too voluminous in discourse. Clarendon.

VQ-LŪ'MI-NOUS-LY, ad. In many volumes or books; copiously; diffusively. Granville.

VQ-LŪ'MI-NOUS-NESS, n. The state or the quality of being voluminous. Dodwell.

† VŌL'Ū-MIST, n. A writer of a volume or of volumes; an author. Milton.

VŌL'UN-TA-RI-LY, ad. In a voluntary manner; of one's own accord; spontaneously. South.

VŌL'UN-TA-RI-NESS, n. The state of being voluntary; spontaneity. Hammond.

VŌL'UN-TA-RY, a. [L. voluntarius; voluntas, will, choice; volvo, to will; It. voluntario; Sp. voluntario; Fr. volontaire.]

1. Acting without compulsion, or without being influenced by another; acting by choice or one's own accord or free will; bestowed freely; gratuitous, spontaneous.

God did not work as a necessary, but a voluntary agent, intending beforehand. Hooker.

2. Proceeding from or of one's own free will.
An action is neither good nor evil unless it be voluntary and chosen. Ep. Taylor.

3. Willing; acting with willingness.
She fell to lust a voluntary prey. Pope.

4. Done by design; designed; intended; intentional. "Voluntary murder." Perkins.

5. Acting or moving in obedience to the will. "Voluntary muscles." Dunglison.

Voluntary conveyance, (Law.) a conveyance without valuable consideration, such as a deed or settlement in favor of a wife or children. — Voluntary escape, an escape of a person from custody by the express consent of his keeper. — Voluntary jurisdiction, (Eng. Law.) a jurisdiction exercised by certain ecclesiastical courts in matters where there is no opposition. — Voluntary oath, an oath taken in some extra-judicial matter, or before some magistrate or officer who cannot compel it to be taken. — Voluntary waste, waste done by acts of commission, as by pulling down a house; — distinguished from permissive waste, which is matter of omission only. Burrill.

Syn. — Voluntary and willing are applicable to the acts of conscious agents, and imply volition. Voluntary labor or measure, willing mind, willing to do good, spontaneous effusion of the heart, burst of applause, or productions of the earth; a voluntary offer; a gratuitous gift or service.

VŌL'UN-TA-RY, n. 1. A volunteer; one who acts of his own accord. [R.] Shak.

2. (Mus.) An extemporaneous performance upon, or a composition written for, the organ, and usually introductory to some other performance. Warner.

VŌL'UN-TA-RY-ISM, n. Voluntary principle or action; the system of supporting anything by voluntary contribution or assistance. [Modern and rare.] Dr. Chalmers.

VŌL'UN-TEER, n. [It. volontario; Sp. voluntario; Fr. volontaire. — See VOLUNTARY, a.]

1. One who engages in any service of his own accord or of his own free will.

2. (Mil.) Any one who enters into service of his own accord; a person who, in time of war, offers his services to his country. Stoqueler.

3. (Law.) A party, other than a wife or child, to whom, or for whose benefit, a voluntary conveyance is made. Burrill.

VŌL'UN-TEER, a. Engaging in service of one's own accord; as, "Volunteer soldiers." Clarke.

VŌL'UN-TEER, v. n. [i. VOLUNTEERED; pp. VOLUNTEERING, VOLUNTEERED.] To act or serve as a volunteer; to act freely. Dryden.

VŌL'UN-TEER, v. a. To offer voluntarily.
Who had volunteered their services against him. B. Jonson.

VQ-LŪPT'Ū-A-RY (vo-lŭpt'yū-a-re), n. [L. voluptuarius; Fr. voluptueux.] One addicted to pleasures, or excess of sensual pleasures; a sensualist; an epicure.
Syn. — See SENSUALIST.

VQ-LŪPT'Ū-A-RY, a. Affording pleasure. Johnson.

VQ-LŪPT'Ū-OŪS (vo-lŭpt'yū-ŭs), a. [L. voluptuosus; It. voluttoso; Sp. voluptuoso; Fr. voluptueux.]

1. Addicted to pleasures, particularly those of sense; luxurious; epicurean; sensual.
The jolly and voluptuous livers. Atterbury.

2. Exciting, or fitted to excite, sensual desires. "Voluptuous charms." Macaulay.

VQ-LŪPT'Ū-OŪS-LY, ad. In a voluptuous manner; luxuriously. South.

VQ-LŪPT'Ū-OUS-NESS, n. The state or the quality of being voluptuous. Donne.

† VQ-LŪPT'ŪY, n. Voluptuousness. Wickliffe.

VQ-LŪTE [vo-lŭt, S. W. P. Sm. Wb.; vŏl'at, Ja.], n. [L. voluta; volvo, volutus, to roll; It. & Sp. voluta; Fr. volute.]

1. (Arch.) The convolved or spiral ornament which forms the principal distinction of the Ionic capital, and which, in another form, is placed diagonally at each angle of the Corinthian and Composite capitals. Brande. Fairholt.

2. (Zool.) One of a genus of marine gastropods, having a shell with a short spire and a plaited columella. Woodward.

VQ-LŪT'ED, a. Having volutes, or spiral forms; with a spiral scroll. Jodrell.

VQ-LŪTION, n. A spiral form. [R.] Ill.

VŌ'MER, n. [L. a ploughshare.] (Anat.) A thin, flat bone separating the nostrils. Dunglison.

VŌM'IC-Ū, n. [L.] (Med.) A purulent collection in the lungs. Dunglison.

VŌM'IC-NŪT, n. The seed of a species of Strychnos. — See NUX VOMICA. Hill.

VŌM'IT, v. n. [L. vomo, vomit (Gr. ἔμειν); It. vomitare; Sp. vomitar; Fr. vomir.] [i. VOMITED; pp. VOMITING, VOMITED.] To eject the contents of the stomach by way of the mouth; to puke; to spew.
The doctor bled him at the stomach, to cure the fever. More.

VŌM'IT, v. a. 1. To throw up from the stomach. The fish vomited out Jonah upon the dry land. Jon. ii. 10.

2. To eject or to throw out with violence.
During the night the volcano . . . vomited up vast quantities of . . . Cool.

VŌM'IT, n. 1. Matter vomited. Sandys.

2. A substance capable of producing vomiting; an emetic. Dunglison.

Black vomit, the yellow fever, so called because it is accompanied by vomiting of black matter. Dunglison.

VŌM'IT-ING, n. Act of one who vomits; ejection from the stomach through the mouth. Dunglison.

VQ-MĪ'TION (vo-mīsh'yn), n. [L. vomitio.] The act or the power of vomiting. Grew.

VŌM'IT-IVE, a. [It. & Sp. vomitivo; Fr. vomitif.] Causing vomits; emetic; vomitory. Brown.

VŌM'IT-NŪT, n. Vomic-nut. Simmonds.

VŌM'IT-Ō-RY, n. 1. An emetic. [R.] Holland.

2. A door of a theatre, or other building, by which the crowd is let out. Scott.

VŌM'IT-Ū-RĪ'TION, n. (Med.) An ineffectual effort to vomit. — a vomiting of but little matter; — vomiting which is effected almost without effort. Dunglison.

VQ-RĀ'CIOUS (vo-rā'shūs, 66), a. [L. vorax; voro, to devour; It. vorace; Sp. voraz; Fr. vorace.] Having voracity; greedy; ravenous; rapacious; feeding eagerly; extremely hungry.

They (crows) are very voracious, and will despatch a carcass in a trice. Dampier.

They devoured it with a voracious appetite. Cook.

Syn. — See RAPACIOUS.

VQ-RĀ'CIOUS-LY (vo-rā'shūs-le), ad. With voracity; greedily; ravenously. Boswell.

VQ-RĀ'CIOUS-NESS (vo-rā'shūs-nēs), n. The quality or the state of being voracious; voracity.

VQ-RĀC'Ū-TY, n. [L. voracitas; It. voracità; Sp. voracidad; Fr. voracité.] The state or the quality of being voracious; greediness; ravenousness; voraciousness; avidity.

Creatures by their voracity pernicious have commonly fewer young. Derham.

Syn. — See AVIDITY.

VQ-RĀG'Ū-NOUS, a. [L. voraginosus; vorago, a gulf.] Full of gulfs or whirlpools. Scott.

VŌR'ĀU-LITE, n. (Mfn.) A brittle, opaque or subtranslucent, blue mineral, of vitreous lustre, crystalline, and also massive, and consisting chiefly of phosphoric acid, alumina, protoxide of iron, magnesia, and water; — called also lazulite. Dana.

VŌR'TĒX, n. [L. verto, to turn: — same as vertex.] pl. L. vŏr'tē-cēs; Eng. vŏr'tēx-es.

1. Any portion of fluid, whether liquid or aeriform, which whirls around, or has a gyratory motion; — particularly a body of water running rapidly round and forming a cavity in the middle, into which floating bodies are drawn; a whirlpool. Newton.

2. A whirlwind. Brande.

3. (Cartesian Philosophy.) A system or collection of material particles, supposed to form a fluid or ether, and to be endowed with a rapid rotatory motion about the same axis. Hutton.

By means of this hypothesis, and the received doctrine of centrifugal forces, a plausible explanation may be given of the motions of the planets, which move nearly in the same plane; but the motions of the comets, which traverse the heavens in all directions, are inexplicable, and in fact are inconsistent with the hypothesis. Brande.

Vortex wheel, turbine wheel.—See TURBINE. Nichol.

VÖR'TI-ÇAL, a. Whirling; turning. Newton.

VÖR'TI-ÇEL, n. [L. vortex, vortice, a whirlpool.] (Zö.) A plaited columella. Woodward.

VÖR-TIG'N-ÖUS, a. [See VERTIGINOUS.] Having a rotatory motion round an axis; vortical. [R.] Cooper.

VÖ'TA-RËSS, n. A female votary. The immortal votaries passed on, In maiden imputation lady free. Shak.

VÖ'TA-RÏST, n. A votary. [R.] Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed. Milton.

VÖ'TA-RÏ, n. One devoted, as by a vow, to some pursuit, service, worship, study, or state of life. A votary to fond desire. Shak.

The enemy of our happiness has his servants and votaries among those who are called by the name of the Son of God. Rogers.

VÖ'TA-RÏ, a. Devoted; promised; consequent on a vow. "Votary resolution." Bacon.

VÖTE, n. [L. votum; voveo, votus, to vow; It. & Sp. voto; Fr. vote.]

1. Suffrage; voice or opinion of a person, given in some matter which is commonly to be determined by a majority of voices or opinions of persons who are empowered to give them; the wish of an individual in regard to any question, measure, or choice, expressed by word of mouth, by ballot, or otherwise.

When the votes are equal in number, the proposed measure is lost. Bowyer.

2. That by which the will, preference, or opinion of a person is expressed; a ballot. Greeley.

The former cast his vote, and the latter his ballot. Holmes.

3. The decision or will of an assembly, or of a majority thereof.

The judgment, opinion, sense, or will of a deliberative assembly, expressed, not to the nature of the subject, but by a majority of votes. The term vote may be applied to a question decided by the assembly. L. S. Cushing.

4. † United voice of persons in public prayer. "Votes of priests and people." Bp. Prideaux.

Syn.—A vote for or against, the right of suffrage; the voice of the people. A vote is given by ballot, by show of hand, by division of the assembly, or viva voce, or in various other ways. The members of Congress are elected by the suffrages of the citizens; in the execution of a will, every executor has a vote in what is transacted.

VÖTE, v. a. [i. VOTED; pp. VOTING, VOTED.]

1. To choose or determine by suffrage. Bacon.

2. To give or grant by vote. The Parliament voted them one hundred thousand pounds by way of recompense for their sufferings. Swift.

3. † To condemn; to devote; to doom. The books of curious arts that were voted to destruction by apostolic authority and zeal. Glanville.

VÖTE, v. n. To give a vote or suffrage. Selden.

VÖT'ER, n. One who votes, or has the right of voting or giving suffrage. Swift.

VÖT'ING, n. Act of one who votes. Pol. Dict.

VÖ'TIVE, a. [L. votivus; It. & Sp. votivo; Fr. votif.—See Vow.] Given or offered in consequence of some vow. "Votive tablets." Dryden. "Votive abstinence." Feltham.

VÖ'TIVE-LÏ, ad. In a votive manner. Clarke.

VÖ'TIVE-NËSS, n. The quality or the state of being votive. H. W. Hamilton.

VÖÜCH, v. a. [L. voco; Norm. Fr. voucher.] [i. VOUGHED; pp. VOUCHING, VOUCHED.]

1. To call to witness; to obtest; to attest. Let him who fights unseen relate his own. And vouch the silent stars and conscious moon. Dryden.

2. † To summon; to call; to bid to come. They allege the same histories, and vouch (as I might say) to their aid the authority of the writers. St. R. Elphinstone.

3. To maintain by affirmations, or by proof; to attest; to warrant; to declare; to affirm.

When any particular matter of fact is vouched by the concurrent testimony of unsuspected witnesses, there our assent is also unavoidable. Locke.

4. To support; to back; to follow up.

At such bold words, vouch'd with a deal of bold. Milton.

5. (Law.) In old practice to call to warranty; to call on to defend, as on a person who has warranted a title to defend it.—to cite or quote. Burrill.

VÖÜCH, v. n. To bear witness; to give attestation.

He declares he will not believe her until the Elector of Hanover shall vouch for the truth of what she hath so solemnly affirmed. St. R.

† VÖÜCH, n. Warranty; attestation. Shak.

VÖÜCH-ËË', n. (Law.) In old practice, one who is vouched, or called to warranty. Burrill.

VÖÜCH'ER, n. 1. One who vouches, or attests.

All the great writers of that age stand up together as vouchers for one another's reputation. Spectator.

2. (Law.) In old practice, a calling to warranty; a calling upon one who has warranted a title, to defend it in an action;—the party who vouched; the tenant in a real action, who called upon another to defend his title.—In old English law, an account-book wherein are entered the acquaintances or warrants for the account-ant's discharge;—any acquaintance or receipt, discharging a person, or being evidence of payment. Burrill.

VÖÜCH'OR, n. (Law.) In old practice, one who calls in a vouchee. Blackstone.

VÖÜCH-SÄFE, v. a. [vouch and safe.] [i. VOUCH-SAFED; pp. VOUCHSAFING, VOUCHSAFED.]

1. To let be done without danger. Johnson.

2. To condescend to grant; to concede.

It is not said by the apostle that God vouchsafed to the heathens the means of salvation; and yet I will not affirm that God will save none of those to whom the sound of the gospel never reached. South.

VÖÜCH-SÄFE', v. n. To deign; to condescend. Doth she not vouchsafes to love me? Shak.

VÖÜCH-SÄFE'MENT, n. Grant; condescension; concession. [R.] Boyle.

VÖÜS'SÖIR' (vö'swör'), n. [Fr.] One of the stones, shaped like a truncated wedge, which form an arch; an arch-stone. Tomlinson.

The centre vöüsoir, or that in the highest part or crown of the arch, is called the keystone. Tomlinson.

VÖÜ (vöü), n. [L. votum; voveo, votus, to vow; It. & Sp. voto; Fr. vow.]

1. A solemn promise;—especially, a promise made to a divine power of something which on other grounds is not obligatory; an act of devotion, by which some part of life, or some part of possessions, is consecrated to a particular purpose.

Thou, O God, hast heard my vows. Ps. lxi. 5. To promise God to do what he commands, or to avoid what he forbids, is not a vow, because we are under an obligation so to act. Brande.

2. A promise of love or of matrimony. By all the vows that ever men have broke, In number more than ever women spoke. Shak.

VÖÜ (vöü), v. a. [L. voveo; Fr. vouer.] [i. VÖÜED; pp. VÖÜING, VÖÜED.]

1. To consecrate by a solemn dedication; to promise to give, as to a divine power.

And last, in honor of his new abode, He vöüed the laurel to the laurel's god. Dryden.

2. † To devote ceremonially.

To Master Harvey . . . I have vöüed this my labor. Spenser.

3. To threaten solemnly, or upon oath.

Is arming, weeping, cursing, vöüing vengeance. Shak.

VÖÜ, v. n. To make vows or solemn promises. Better is it that thou shouldst not vow, than that thou shouldst vow and not pay. Ecc. v. 5.

VÖÜED (vöüd), p. Devoted; consecrated. Milton.

VÖÜ'EL, n. [L. vocals; voco, to call; It. vocale; Sp. vocal; Fr. voyelle.]

1. A free and uninterrupted sound of the human voice. The vowels, in English, are a, e, i, o, u; also w at the end of a syllable, and y except at the beginning of a syllable.

The vowels are formed by the voice, modified, but not interrupted by the various positions of the tongue and lips. Their differences depend on the proportions between the aperture of the lips and the internal cavity of the mouth, which is altered by the different elevations of the tongue. Wheatstone.

We should of course expect the vowels to exhibit a still more liquid or fluent character, than the consonants. Such we find to be the facts, so that vowels are liquid in sound, but a very short duration in its continuance; consonants are harsh in a general view, they are harsh in sound, as unimportant, or at least unessential, elements. Dr. D. R. Goodwin.

2. A letter or character which represents a free and uninterrupted sound of the human voice. Sir J. Stoddart.

VÖÜ'EL, a. Belonging to, or partaking of the nature of, a vowel, or vowels.

The sound of the voice is generated at the glottis, and, when it is first produced, it is a vowel sound, and is continued by the same organ, and is not interrupted by any other organ, and is then only, a consonantal articulation. Stoddart.

VÖÜ'EL-ISH, a. Partaking of the nature of a vowel; resembling a vowel. B. Jonson.

VÖÜ'EL-ISM, n. Use of vowels. [R.] Blackwood.

VÖÜ'ELLED (vöü'eld), a. Furnished with vowels. "Well-vöüelled words." Dryden.

VÖÜ'ER, n. One who makes a vow. Sanderson.

VÖÜ-FËL-LÖW, n. One bound by the same vow with another. [R.] Shak.

VÖÜ, n. [L.] A voice; the voice.

VÖÜ PÖP'UL-Ï. [L.] The voice of the people.

VÖÜ'AGE (vöü'aj), n. [Fr. voyage, from L. via, a way, and ago, to pursue.]

1. Formerly, a passage, journey, or travel by sea or by land;—now applied only to a journey or travel by sea, or the passage of a vessel upon the seas, either from one port to another, or to several ports.

Guyon forward ran his voyage make, With his black palmer, that him guided still. Spenser.

Our ships wait sundry voyages. Bacon.

2. † Course; attempt. [Low.] Shak.

3. † The practice of travelling. Bacon.

Syn.—See JOURNEY.

VÖÜ'AGE (vöü'aj), v. n. [Fr. voyager.] [i. VOY-AGED; pp. VOYAGING, VOYAGED.] To take a voyage; to travel by sea. Pope.

VÖÜ'AGE, v. a. To travel; to pass over. [R.]

With what pain I have voyaged the unreal, vast, unbounded deep Of horrible confusion. Milton.

VÖÜ'AGE-A-BLE, a. That may be sailed or travelled over; navigable. Seager.

VÖÜ'Ä-GER, n. [Fr. voyageur.] One who makes a voyage or travels by sea. Pope.

VÖÜAGEUR (vwa'ya-zhür'), n. [Fr.] A traveller by land or water;—a Canadian river boatman. W. Irving.

VÖÜ'Ä-ING, n. Act of making a voyage. Ec. Rev.

VÖÜ'AL, n. (Naut.) A large messenger sometimes used in weighing an anchor by a capstan;—also the block through which the messenger passes.—Written also vöü. Dana.

VÖÜ, or VÖÜH, n. (Min.) A natural cavity in a lode;—called also rogie. Ansted.

VÜL'CAN, n. [L. Vulcanus.] (Roman Myth.) The god of fire. Wm. Smith.

VÜL-CÄ'NI-Ä, a. [L. Vulcanius.]

1. Relating to Vulcan. Andrews.

2. Relating to the Vulcanites, or to their theory of the earth; Vulcanic. Cleveland.

Vulcanian theory, (Geol.) a theory which supposes the earth to have been in a state of igneous fusion, to have gradually cooled, and subsequently to have become covered with a solid crust. It also supposes the land to have been elevated by an internal force, the irregularities of its surface to have been produced by volcanic eruptions, and the transported soils to have been formed by the disintegration of the higher grounds. Ency. Amer.

VÜL-CÄN'IC, a. [L. Vulcanus, the god of fire.] Relating to Vulcan; Vulcanian.

VÜL'CAN-IST, n. One who holds to the Vulcanian theory of the earth, or that the present form of the earth has been produced by the action of fire. Ch. Os.

VÜL-CAN-I-ZÄ'TION, n. A process, discovered by C. Goodyear of New York, of effecting a combination of caoutchouc, or Indian rubber, and sulphur, and of thus imparting to the former substance new properties by which it becomes applicable to many useful purposes. Wood & Baché.

VUL/CAN-IZE, v. a. To subject to the process of vulcanization, as caoutchouc. Miller.

Vulcanized Indian rubber appears to consist of the elastic gum with two or three per cent. of its weight of sulphur. One of the most useful modes of effecting the conversion is to dissolve the caoutchouc in turpentine in which the proper proportion of sulphur had been previously dissolved; on allowing the solvent to evaporate, the mixture of caoutchouc and sulphur may be moulded into the form of the article required. It is only on the application of a heat ranging from 270° to 300° F. that the peculiar properties of the sulphurized compound are developed. Müller.

† VUL-CĀ'NŌ, n. [It.] Volcano. Arbutnot.

VUL/GAR, a. [L. vulgaris; vulgus, a crowd, the multitude; vohō, volūtus, to roll, to form by rolling together; It. vulgare, volgare; Sp. vulgar; Fr. vulgaire.]

1. Pertaining to the multitude or common people; suiting to, or practised among, the common people; plebeian. "Vulgar life." Addison.

VY'ING, p., from vie.—See VIE.

King vulture (Sarcophagus Papa)

Vultur cinereus

W.

W a letter found only in the alphabets of modern languages, is the twenty-third letter of the English alphabet. It partakes of the nature of a vowel and of a consonant. It is a consonant at the beginning of words and syllables; in other cases it is a vowel, being but another form of u. In English it is scarcely used as a vowel, except when united to another vowel, as in new, now, &c.; though in Welsh, the w is used alone, as in cwm (kŏm), being equivalent to u or oo.

"In form it resembles two V's; and its English name is derived from the fact of the letter v being identical with w in the Latin, and in the more early form of the English language." Brande.

The semi-vowels [as y and w] may be described as a sort of fulcrum or pivot of articulation in passing from the English e (or i short) to any closely subjoined vowel sound, in the case of y; and from u or oo to any such vowel sound, in the case of w. Thus, in yarn, wit, we may give first the full sounds ee-arn, oo-it, where, between the initial vowel sound, ee, oo, and the following vowel sounds, the organs pass through a certain momentary but definite position, which gives the character of a consonant sound, and which we have denominated a fulcrum or pivot. If now the vowel part, the ee or oo sound be reduced to a minimum, and we begin immediately upon this pivot or fulcrum, and pronounce yard, wit, we shall have the y and w representing sounds of a proper consonant character. Dr. R. R. Goodwin.

WAB'BLE (wŏb'bl), v. n. [Ger. wirbeln, to whirl.—See WABBLE.] [i. WABBLING; pp. WABBLING, WABBLING.] To incline to one side and to the other alternately, as a wheel or other revolving body; to waddle. Moxon.

 WÄ'PEN-TÄKE, or WÄ'PEN-TÄKE [wäp'en-täk, W. E. J. F. Ja. K.; wäp'en-täk, P. Sm.], n. [A. S. wapengetace, wapentace; wapen, a weapon. — Low L. wapentakium, wapentakium.] A division of certain counties in the northern part of England; viz., in those of Yorkshire, Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire, Leicestershire, and Northamptonshire, corresponding with a hundred. Spenser. Burill.
*"So called, as some think, because the inhabitants within such divisions were taught (A. S. tecan, to teach) the use of arms."* Bosworth.
Hoveden derives this word from the A. S. wapen, and tac (L. tactus armorum), literally wapentacoch, an ancient ceremony performed in the hundred, and which he describes in Latin, of which the following is a translation: "When any one received the appointment of chief of a wapentake, on a day appointed all the principal men came together to meet him in the place where they usually assembled, and, as he alighted from his horse, all rose up before him. The chief then, raising his lance, received fealty from them all, according to custom, for all who were present touched his lance with theirs, and thus, by the touch of their weapons, expressed their submission to his authority." Runolph of Chester, however, explains wapentake to mean a taking of wraons, observing that, as often as there was a new lord of a hundred, the vassals gave up their arms to him in token of subjection. And Sir Thomas Smith says, that anciently musters were taken of the armor and weapons of the several inhabitants of every several wapentake; and from those that could not find sufficient pledges for their good behaving, their weapons were taken away, and given to others. Burill.

1. A well-known fluid; a substance very abundant in nature, essential to the existence and growth of living beings, whether animal or vegetable, liquid at ordinary temperatures, boiling and converted into steam under usual atmospheric pressure at 212° Fahrenheit, becoming solid in the form of ice at 32°, void, when pure, of color, taste, and smell, and composed of one equivalent of oxygen and one of hydrogen.

Water is a powerful refractor of light, and an imperfect conductor of electricity; conducts heat very slowly, evaporates at all temperatures, and so rapidly in a vacuum, in which the vapor is absorbed as fast as it is formed, that the cold produced by the evaporation of a part of the water, contained in a shallow vessel, freezes the remaining part; and is elastic and compressible, its bulk being diminished fifty-three millionths by a pressure of one atmosphere, and in like proportion to the compressing force by greater pressures. It has its maximum density at about 39°, has the same density at 32° and 49°, has its bulk increased about 1700 times by conversion into steam, and about one fifteenth at the moment of congelation, when its expansive force bursts the strongest vessels. It is a powerful solvent, dissolving gases and a great variety of solid substances. It is diffused through the atmosphere in the form of vapor, is connected with many atmospheric optical phenomena, and falls in the form of rain, snow, and hail. Common water always holds in solution more or less foreign matter. Wood & Baché. Miller. Graham.

2. Any large collection of water, as the sea, a lake, or a river. "Such as travel by land or by water." Common Prayer.

3. Urine: the fluid secreted by the kidneys.

4. The lustre of a diamond or pearl; as, "A diamond of the first water."

"Tis a good form

And rich: here is a water, look ye!

Shak.

Hard water, water which contains a certain quantity of earthy salts, — usually of lime or of magnesia, — by which soap is curdled and wasted, the salt and the soap decomposing each other. Miller. — Soft water, water not holding in solution any substance which decomposes and curdles soap. Miller. — Mineral waters, a name applied to waters so much impregnated with foreign substances as to have a peculiar flavor, and a peculiar operation on the animal economy. — Carbonated waters, mineral waters characterized by containing an excess of carbonic acid, and often holding in solution carbonates of lime, magnesia, and iron.

— Sulphuretted waters, mineral waters containing sulphuretted hydrogen, and distinguished by the peculiar fetid smell of that gas, and by yielding a brown precipitate with the salts of lead or of silver. — Chalybeate waters, mineral waters containing a salt of iron, usually the carbonate of the protoxide of iron, held in solution by an excess of carbonic acid. They are characterized by a strong inky taste, and by striking a black color with the infusion of galls, and a blue one with ferrocyanide of potassium. — Saline waters, mineral waters, the predominant properties of which depend upon saline impregnation. The salts most commonly present are the sulphates and carbonates of soda, lime, and magnesia, and the chlorides of sodium, calcium, and magnesium. Wood & Baché. — Water of crystallization, a definite quantity of water combining with many salts when they crystallize, which is essential to the form of the salt, but which may be expelled by heat without altering its chemical properties. Miller. — To hold water, to be sound; to be tight. — To make water, to void urine: — (Naut.) to leak.

Water is much used in composition for things made with water, being in water, or growing in water; as, water-flood, water-courses, &c.

WÄ'TER, v. a. [i. WATERED; pp. WATERING, WATERED.]

WÁ'TER-PÖISE, n. An instrument for measuring the specific gravity of water; areometer; hydrometer. Hutton.

WÁ'TER-PÓT, n. A vessel for holding water.

WÁ'TER-PÓW'ER, n. Power of water employed, or capable of being employed, to move machinery. Clarke.

WÁ'TER-PÓX, n. (Med.) A variety of chicken-pox; Varicella. Dunghlson.

WÁ TER-PRÍV'I-LÈGE, n. The right or privilege to use water for turning machinery. — a stream or body of water capable of being employed for turning machinery. T. Snell.

WÁ'TER-PRÓOF, a. Impervious to water; resisting the passage or action of water. Francis.

WÁ'TER-PRÓOF'ING, n. The process of rendering fabrics impervious to water. Brande.

WÁ'TER-PÚRS'LAIN, n. (Bot.) An aquatic plant of the genus Pephis. Loudon.

WÁ'TER-QUÁLM (-kwám or -kwám), n. (Med.) Water-brash; Pyrosis. Dunghlson.

WÁ'TER-QUÍN'TAIN, n. A quintain or tilting on the water. Clarke.

WÁ'TER-RÁD'ISH, n. (Bot.) A species of water-cress. Johnson.

WÁ'TER-RÁM, n. A machine for raising water without the expenditure or aid of any other force than that which is produced by the momentum of a part of the water to be raised; — called also hydraulic-ram. Lib. of Useful Knowledge.

In the cut, a a is the supply-pipe, which leads the running stream down to the chamber b b bolted to the bed-plate c c. A valve d d is provided to the chamber b b, which has a tendency to fall from its seat so as to keep the water-way open, till the stream, flowing through the pipe a a, acquires sufficient momentum to close it. The velocity of the stream being thus checked, the water raises the valve e, which moves the reverse way of the valve d d, and enters the air-vessel f f, from which it is finally passed by the pipe g g, which can be led to any desired elevation above the level of the ram. On the water passing into the air chamber f f, it is pressed upon by the air in the upper part of the vessel, which closes the valve e. The momentum of the flowing stream in the pipe a a and the vessel b b being thus exhausted, the valve d d falls, and allows the water to escape from the vessel b b through the valve opening, till the flowing stream again acquires such momentum as to close the valve d d. When this happens, the valve e is again opened, and a second quantity of water discharged into the air-vessel. The action thus described goes on continually, resulting in a regular beating or pulsation of the valves e, d d, each rising and falling alternately.

Water-ram.

WÁ'TER-RÁT, n. (Zool.) A species of rat which inhabits the banks of rivers, ditches, and ponds, in which it burrows and breeds; Arvicola amphibius. Baird.

WÁ'TER-RÁTE, n. A rate or tax for the supply of water, as to a house. Simmonds.

WÁ'TER-SPÁN'IËL (-spán'yel), n. A variety or breed of the spaniel noted for its fine hunting qualities, and its aquatic propensities. Beil.

The larger and smaller water-spaniels differ from each other only in size, and from the other spaniels in the roughness of their coats, which approach in this respect to the large water-dog, from which and the common spaniel they are probably descended. — See WATER-DOG. Beil.

WÁ'TER-SPEED'WÉLL, n. (Bot.) A species of speedwell, or Veronica. Crabb.

WÁ'TER-SPI'DER, n. (Ent.) The common name of spiders of the family Hydrachnidæ, which resemble ticks, and constantly live in the water; water-tick. Baird.

WÁ'TER-SPOÚT, n. (Meteor.) A name applied to a cloudy meteor observed over or in the neighborhood of bodies of water, rarely on land, and supposed to be of the same nature with the tornado. — See TORNADO.

The water-spout is of limited extent, has a progressive motion, is accompanied by violent movements of the air, either in spiral or in radial lines, towards the axis, by various electrical phenomena, and by the fall of rain and hail. At its commencement, a part of the cloud protrudes downwards, and is elongated in the form of an inverted cone, which soon meets the earth, or a cloudlike mass or cone rising from the water. The whole cone is sometimes luminous with electric light. A large quantity of water, which is always fresh, sometimes falls from the water-spout at sea, and on land trees are prostrated, houses unroofed, and heavy bodies are raised by it into the air, and transported a considerable distance. Young. Esqy. Kaemtz.

WÁ'TER-TÁB'BY, n. A kind of waved silk stuff or tabby. Swift.

1. A thick, tenacious substance, forming the cells of bees; bees-wax.

"It has long been a matter of dispute, among naturalists, whether the bee collects wax already formed in plants, or secretes it from sugar in the mechanism of its body." Tomlinson.

Bees, even though fed upon pure sugar only, have the power of converting it into wax, which is therefore to be regarded as an animal secretion. Bees-wax, at ordinary temperatures, is tough and solid, has a yellow color, a peculiar feel, and fuses at about 145°, and has the specific gravity of 0.96. It consists of three different substances, myricine, cerine, or cerotic acid, and ceroleine. Miller.

2. A thick, tenacious, vegetable product.

Wax is a product of plants of nearly the same nature as the fixed oils, is found extensively as an excretion, particularly on the surface of leaves and fruits, forming the bloom or glaucous surface which repels water, and prevents such surfaces from being wetted. It forms a thick coating on some fruits, as the bayberry. Wax also exists in cells, especially in the cells of leaves. Gray.

WEIGHT (wāt), n. [A. S. wiht; Dan. vægt; Sw. vigt; Ger. gewicht. — See WEIGH.]

1. The force with which any body tends to the centre of the earth; heaviness; gravity; ponderousness: — the comparative measure of the gravity of bodies at the earth's surface. Hutton.

The weight of a body is proportional to the quantity of matter which it contains. Owing to the spheroidal figure of the earth, the weight of the same body is different at different parts of the earth's surface; it is also different at different distances from the earth's centre. A body immersed in a fluid lighter than itself loses a part of its weight equal to the weight of an equal bulk of that fluid. Hutton.

2. A certain known and standard quantity of a heavy metal, as iron or brass, used with scales or a steelyard, to ascertain the gravity of the articles which it counterpoises; as, "A pound weight"; "An ounce weight." Davies & Peck.

† WHIG (hwig), n. [A. S. hwoeg.] A kind of sour or thin milk; whey. Breton.

WHIG (hwig), n. 1. (Eng. Hist.) A name first applied in 1679 to the members of a great political party who opposed the cause of the royal family;—opposed to tory.—See TORY. P. Cyc.

The whigs of the last century and a half are generally viewed as the representatives of the friends of reform or change in the ancient constitution of the country, ever since the popular element became active in the legislature, whether they were called Parliam., Nonconformists, Roundheads, Covenanters, or by any other name. P. Cyc.

According to Bishop Burnet and others, it is derived from whiggam, a word used by Scotch peasants in driving their horses—the drivers being called whiggamores, contracted to whigs. In 1643, after the Duke of Hamilton's defeat, the ministers animated their people to rise and march to Edinburgh. This was called the whiggamores' march; and, ever after that, all who opposed the court came, in contempt, to be called whigs; and from Scotland the word was introduced into England. According to Daniel De Foe, Woodrow, and others, the word was taken from a mixed drink which the Scottish Covenanters drank in their wanderings, composed of water and sour milk, and called whig or whey.

2. (American Hist.) One who supported the revolutionary movement, in opposition to the measures of the English government;—opposed to tory or royalist.—See TORY.

To comprehend the whole of religion amongst the ancients, and the parts which it contained. Broome.

2. A system; a regular combination of parts.

Begin with sense, of every art the soul;

Parts answering parts shall slide into a whole. Pope.

There are wholes of different kinds; for, in the first place, there is an extended whole, of which the parts lie contiguous, such as body and space. Secondly, there is a whole of which the parts are separated or discrete, such as number. . . Thirdly, there is a whole of which the parts do not exist together, but only by succession, such as time, consisting of minutes, hours, and days, or as many more parts as we please, but which all exist successively, or not together. Fourthly, there is what may be called a logical whole, of which the several species are parts. Animal, for example, is a whole, in this sense; and man, dog, horse, &c., are the several parts of it. And, fifthly, the different qualities of the same substance may be said to be different parts of that substance. — Lord Monboddo.

Upon the whole, all things being taken into consideration, "It cannot consist with the divine attributes that the impious man's joys should, upon the whole, exceed those of the upright." Aitkenbury.

WHŌLE'-HŌŌFED (hāl'hōf), a. Having the hoof undivided; solidungulous. Kirby.

WHOR'TLE-BĒR-RY (hwur'tl-bēr-e), n. [A. S. heort-berg; heort, a hart, and berga, a berry.] The common English name of shrubby plants of the genus Vaccinium, or, in the U. S., also of the genus Gaylussacia, formerly included in the genus Vaccinium, especially of Gaylussacia resinosa, or Vaccinium resinum, which is called also huckleberry. — the globular, esculent fruit of these plants. — See HUCKLEBERRY. Gray.

WHŌSE (hōz), pron. The possessive case of who and which. — See WHO.

The possessive of who is properly whose; the pronoun which, originally indeclinable, had no possessive. It was supplied, in the common periphrastic manner, by the help of the preposition and the article. But as this could not fail to enfeeble the expression, when so much time was given to mere conjunctives, all our best authors, both in prose and verse, have now come regularly to adopt, in such cases, the possessive of who, and thus have substituted one syllable in the room of three, as in the example following: "Philosophy, whose end is to instruct us in the knowledge of nature," for "Philosophy, the end of which is to instruct us." Some grammarians remonstrate; but it ought to be remembered that use, well established, must give law to grammar, and not grammar to use. Dr. Campbell.

WHŌ'SŌ (hō'sō), pron. Whoever. [Antiquated.]

My sentence is for open war of wiles. More unexpected I least not: them let those contrive who need. Milton.

† WILE, v. a. To deceive; to beguile. Spenser.

WIL'FÜL, a. 1. † Willing; done or suffered by design; voluntary. Fore.

2. Exerting the will capriciously or through motives merely in itself; stubborn; obstinate; contumacious; perverse; self-willed. Milton.

WIL'FÜL-LY, ad. 1. † Willing by design; on purpose. Christ shed out wilfully for man's life the blood that was in his veins. Pope.

2. Obstinate; stubbornly. Tillotson.

WIL'FÜL-NĒSS, n. The state or the quality of being wilful; obstinacy; stubbornness. Shak.

WIL'LI-LY, ad. By stratagem; slyly; fraudulently.

WIL'LI-NĒSS, n. The quality or the state of being wily; guile; cunning; craftiness. Howell.

WILK, n. See WHELK. Drayton.

WILL, n. [Goth. willja; A. S. willja; Dut. wil, willje; Ger. will; Dan. ville; Sw. vilje; Icel. vili.—Gael. will; Ir. ail.—Slav. volia, vola.—Gr. βούλη.—"The L. voluntas is nearly related to this word." Bosworth.]

1. The power or faculty of the mind by which we desire and purpose, or determine to do or to forbear, an action; power of determination.

Every man is conscious of a power to determine in things which he conceives to depend upon his determination. To this power we give the name of will. Reid.

2. Act of willing; volition; determination.

Is it her nature, or is it her will, To be so cruel to a humble foe? Spenser.

3. Discretion; pleasure. [R.]

Go, then, the guilty at thy will chastise. Pope.

4. Command; direction; behest.

At his will the south wind bloweth. Eccles. xliii. 16.

5. Disposition; inclination; desire.

God takes men's hearty desires and will, instead of the deed, where they have not power to fulfil it; but he never took the deed instead of the will. Baxter.

6. Power; government; control.

He had his will of his mind before he began to do it; he had the mastery of his parents ever since he was born, and why, now he is grown up, must he have it still? Locke.

7. (Law.) An instrument in writing, executed in form of law, by which a person makes a disposition of his property, to take effect after his death; testament; devise. Burrill.

The first will of a sovereign of England on record, is that of Richard II. in 1399. Puley.

Freedom of the will. See FREE-WILL. — Good will, favor; kindness: — right intention. — Ill-will, malice; malignity. See ILL-WILL. — Will with a wisp, Jack with a lantern. See JACK.

Syn. — A will, when it operates upon personal property, is sometimes called a testament, and when upon real estate, a deed, but the more general denomination of the instrument, embracing equally real and personal estate, is that of last will and testament. Of these several terms, it may be observed that "testament" is directly derived from the testamentum of the civil law, and though formerly distinguished from a will, as importing the appointment of an executor, and as particularly applicable to personal property, is now generally used as synonymous with it, or rather it may be said to be comparatively disused, except in connection with will. A will may contain several devises. — See TESTAMENT. Burrill.

WILL, v. a. [Goth. vilja; A. S. willan; Dut. willen; Ger. wollen; Dan. ville; Sw. vilja. — Gr. βολῶμαι; L. volo; It. volere; Fr. vouloir. — Sansc. var. to choose.] [I WILL, thou WILLEST, he WILLS or WILLETH: — i. WILLED; pp. WILLING, WILLED.]

1. To determine in the mind; to desire.

This discovers to us the expedient of a steadiness and consistency of will, and that will is a thing a man may have, and that it is a good reason shall occur to the contrary. Seneca.

2. To be inclined or resolved to have. [R.]

There, there, Hortensio; will you any wife? Shak.

3. To command; to direct; to enjoin.

Man was willed to love his enemies. Shak.

His majesty willed that they should attend. Clarendon.

4. To dispose of by will or testament. Smart.

WILL, v. n. To dispose of effects by will. Brande.

WILL, v. auxiliary and defective. [i. WOULD. — Present I WILL, thou WILT, he WILL.] It is used as one of the two signs of the future tense, the other being shall. — See SHALL.

Will in the first person promises or threatens; as, "I or we will do it"; in the second and third persons, for the most part, it merely foretells; as, "You, he, or they will do it."

Master, go on, and I will follow thee. Shak.

Wilt thou be lord of the whole world? Shak.

This child I to myself will take. Wordsworth.

Will is sometimes used as equivalent to may or may be. "Be that as it will." Addison.

Will "It [will] is one of the signs of the future tense, of which it is difficult to show or limit the signification. I will come, I am determined to come, importing choice. — Thou wilt come, It must be that thou must come, importing necessity; or, It shall be that thou shalt come, importing choice. — Wilt thou come? Hast thou determined to come? importing choice. — He will come, He is resolved to come; or, It must be that he must come, importing either choice or necessity. — It will come, It must be that it must come, importing necessity. — The plural follows the analogy of the singular." Dr. Johnson. — See SHALL.

WILL'LEM-ITE, n. (Min.) A brittle mineral, of a whitish or greenish-yellow color; when purest, transparent to opaque, occurring in crystals, and also in grains, or massive, and consisting of silica and oxide of zinc. Dana.

+WILL'-WORSHIP (-wūr-), n. Voluntary or supererogatory adoration. Col. ii. 23.

+WILL'-WORSHIP-PER (-wūr-), n. One who practises will-worship. Bp. Taylor.

WIL'LY, n. A machine for cleaning wool, and separating its fibres, consisting of a cylinder armed with spikes projecting from it in a spiral direction round its circumference, and enclosed in a case. Tomlinson.

Will "The word willy or willly is a corruption of the willow of the cotton manufacture; and this, again, is probably a corruption of winnow, the action of the machine being to separate impurities from the wool; but, according to some authorities, the first willow-machine was made of willow wood, whence the name." Tomlinson.

WIL'LY-ING-MA-CHINE', n. A willy. Simmonds.

+WIL'SOME, a. Wilful. Prompt. Parv.

+WIL'SOME-NESS, n. Obstinacy. Wickliffe.

WILT, v. n. [Dut. & Ger. welken, to wither. — See WELK.] [i. WILTED; pp. WILTING, WILTED.]

To droop; to begin to wither, as plants or flowers cut or plucked off. Holloway.

Miss Amy pinned a flower to her breast; and, when she died, she held the wilted tinctments close in her hand. Judd.

A word common in the United States, and provincial in England, where welk and welt are used in the same sense. — "To welt, for wether, spoken of green herbs or flowers, is a general word." Ray.

WINCING-MA-CHINE, n. A name given to the dyer's reel, which is suspended horizontally by the ends of its iron axis in bearings over the vat, so that the line of the axis, being placed over the middle partition in the copper, will permit the piece of cloth, which is wound on the reel, to descend alternately into either compartment of the bath, according as it is turned to the right or to the left; — called also wince. Ure.

WIN'CO-PIPE, n. A small red flower, which, opening in the morning, bodes a fair day. Bacon.

This answers to the description of the pimpernel, or poor man's weather-glass, a little trailing-plant (Anagallis arvensis) with brick-red flowers, which generally open at eight in the morning, and close in the afternoon, and also refuse to expand in rainy weather. Eng. Cyc.

WIND [wind or wind, S. W. J. E. F. Ja. K. Cobden; wind, P. Sm. R. C. Wb. Kenrick], n. [Goth. vinda; A. S. Dut., & Ger. wind; Dan. & Sw. vind; Ice. vindr. — W. gwynt. — Sansc. vāyā, vātā. — L. ventus; It. vento; Sp. viento; Fr. vent. — From Ger. wehan, to blow; part. wehant, blowing, contracted wind. Adelung.]

1. Air in motion; a natural movement of a portion of the atmosphere from one part of the surface of the earth to another; a natural current of air.

The primary cause of winds is the unequal distribution of heat, at different parts of the earth's surface, or in different regions of the atmosphere of equal elevation, which occasions variations of density and consequently of weight in the air. The colder and heavier air displaces the warmer and lighter air, and is itself replaced by other air. The motions thus originating are variously modified by the earth's rotation, and by numerous other causes. Hutton.

2. † Direction of the wind from a particular point of the compass.

The people of Bruges and Antwerp neglected that excellent invention (the compass) which had been discovered by Columbus, and used only the old method of pointing out the wind by the hand.

3. Breath; power or act of respiration. "Shortness of wind in pearly old men." Temple.

It stopped at once the passage of his wind. Dryden.

4. Air put in motion by some artificial means. As in an organ, from one blast of wind. To many a row of pipes the soundboard breathes. Milton.

5. Breath modulated by an instrument or by the vocal organs.

Their instruments were various in their kind; Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind. Dryden.

6. Air impregnated with scent. [R.]

A pack of dog-fish had him in the wind. Swift.

7. Flatulence, air in the alimentary tube.

It turns Wisdom to folly, as nourishment to wind. Milton.

8. A sort of disease in sheep. Clarke.

"These two modes of pronunciation have been long contending for superiority, till at last the former [wind] seems to have gained a complete victory, except in the territories of rhyme. . . . Mr. Sheridan tells us that Swift used to jeer those who pronounced wind with the i short by saying, 'I have a great wind to find why you pronounce it wind.' A very illiberal critic retorted this upon Mr. Sheridan by saying, 'If I may be so bold, I should be glad to be told why you pronounce it goold.' . . . Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Scott give the same preference to the first sound of this word that I have done. Dr. Kenrick and Mr. Barclay give only the short sound. Mr. Perry joins them in this sound, but says in dramatic scenes it has the long one. Mr. Nares says it has certainly the short sound in common usage, but that all our best poets rhyme it with mind, kind, &c." Walker.

"In common conversation, we pronounce the i in wind like the i in bit; in rehearsing or declamation, however, we pronounce it like the i in bite." Dr. Latham.

Between wind and water, (Naut.) applied to that part of a ship's bottom which is frequently brought above the water by her agitation when at sea. Mar. Dict. — Four winds, winds blowing from the four cardinal points of the compass. — Periodical or stated winds, winds that constantly return at certain times; as the shifting trade winds which blow from one point during certain months of the year, and from the contrary point the rest of the year. Hutton. — To carry the wind. (Man.) to toss the nose as high as the ears, as a horse. Wright. — To go down the wind, to decay, to be unsuccessful. "He went down the wind still." L'Estrange. — To get wind, to become known — To take or have the wind, to gain or have the advantage or upper hand. "Counsellors will get wind of him." Bacon. — The wind's eye, (Naut.) the direct point from which the wind blows. Mar. Dict.

Syn. — Wind is air in motion, gentle or violent; and it assumes various forms and terms. A gentle breeze; a brisk gale; an impetuous blast; a sudden gust; a tremendous thunder-storm, or a storm of hail or snow; a violent tempest; a furious whirlwind; a destructive hurricane or tornado.

WIND, v. a. [i. WINDED; pp. WINDING, WINDED.] 1. † To ventilate. Prompt. Parv.

2. To perceive or follow by the wind or scent; to scent; to nose. Hudibras.

3. To ride or drive, as a horse, so as to render scant of wind or breath. Smart.

4. To rest, as a horse, in order to recover wind or breath. Smart.

5. To sound by blowing or inflation. [In this sense pronounced wind. — See WIND, n.]

What time the gray fly winds her sultry horn. Milton.
Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net. Pope.
Or where the beetle winds His small but sullen horn. Collins.

This definition is that given by Dr. Johnson, upon which Mr. Smart remarks as follows: "So might the sense be interpreted while this verb followed the old pronunciation of the substantive, — namely, wind, — but the present notion of winding a horn is that which Milton has when speaking of 'a winding bout of linked sweetness.' — See WIND, v. a.

To wind a ship, (Naut.) to change her position by bringing the stern to lie in the situation of the head, or directly opposite to its former situation. Mar. Dict.

WIND, v. a. [A. S. windan; Dut. & Ger. winden; Dan. vinda; Sw. & Ice. vinda.] [i. WOUND; pp. WINDING, WOUND.]

1. To turn round; to cause to turn or revolve, as on an axis; to twist; to circumvolve.

Nero could touch and turn the harp wheel; but in government he could not turn the wheel of justice, and times set them down too soon. Bacon.

2. To turn, as one flexible substance round some other body; to twine; to coil; to wreath.

And turn the adamant spindle round, On which the fate of gods and men is wound. Milton.

3. To guide or cause to move in a twining or bending line or course; to turn in and out.

To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus, And witch the world with noble horsemanship. Shak.

4. To introduce slyly or by insinuation.

I under fair pretence of friendly ends, Wind me into the easy-hearted man. Milton.

5. To secure by shifts or expedients. [R.]

The means to turn and wind a trade. Hudibras.

6. To change; to alter; to vary. [R.]

Were our legislature vested in the prince, he might turn and wind our constitution at his pleasure, and shape our government to his fancy. Addison.

7. To enfold; to encircle; to embrace.

Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms. Shak.

8. To sound, so that the notes shall be prolonged and mutually involved. — See WIND, v. a.

The Marquis of Barlo and the Marquis of Clerkenwell [appeared], who hunters who wound their horns. Pennant.
To wind off, to unwind. — To wind out, to extricate. — To wind up, to bring into a ball or small compass; — to put into a state of renovated or continued motion, as a watch, clock, or other machine, by winding the cord or spring round its axis: — to raise by degrees, as a person's temper. Atterbury. To straighten or tighten, as the string of a musical instrument, in order to tune it. Waller. To put in order for regular action. "The charm 's wound up." Shak. To close up, as one's affairs: — to silence in debate.

WIND, v. n. 1. To be convolved or twined; to take a spiral course; to coil.

Some . . . plants creep along the ground, or wind about other trees, and cannot support themselves. Bacon.

If aught obstruct thy course, yet stand not still, But wind about till thou hast topped the hill. Dryden.

2. To proceed in flexures, or in a turning or bending line or course; to turn in and out.

So that the eye went near the shop, And all the while the wind was blowing. Gay.

To wind out, to be exticated. Milton. — To wind up, to stop business; to close. Bartlett.

The imperfect or pretense tense of this verb is wound; but formerly wound was sometimes used.

Down followed the trail hence, which wound first towards the west, and then towards the east. Cumden.

He took the path that wound to the cave. Pope.

WIND'AGE, n. (Mil.) The difference between the diameter of the bore of a piece of ordnance and that of the ball or shell. Mil. Ency.

WIND'BORE, n. (Mining.) The bottom pipe in a lift of pumps. Ansted.

WIND'-BOUND, a. Prevented from sailing by contrary winds. Dryden.

WIND'-BRÖ-KEN (wind'brö-kn), a. Diseased in the wind or breath, as a horse, the inspiration being performed by one effort, but the expiration by two. The disease is caused by the rupture or running together of some of the air-cells. Youatt.

WIND'-CHANG-ING, a. Inconstant as the wind; fickle. [R.] "Wind-changing Warwick." Shak.

WIND'-DRIED, a. Dried in the wind. Wright.

WIND'-DRÖP-SY, n. (Med.) Any white, crepitant, shining, elastic, indolent tumor, caused by the introduction of air into the areolar texture: — a swelling of the abdomen, caused by accumulation of air in the intestinal tube or in the peritoneum. Dunglison.

2. A reel or other instrument which is used for winding on. Swift.

3. A plant that twists itself round others. "Winders and creepers." Bacon.

4. A winding step in a staircase. Mason.

WIND'ER, v. a. To winnow. [Local.] Wright.

WIND'FALL, n. 1. Fruit that is blown down from the tree. Brelyn.

2. A tree that has been prostrated by the wind.

There be two books that seem to cross the authorities to this effect: the first is Henry VI. and 44 Edward III. of the destruction of the tower of London, and assigned in the first of these books to the year 1471, and in the second to the year 1472. Bacon.

3. The track of a whirlwind in a forest, where the trees are laid prostrate. Hammond.

4. Any unexpected event, whether productive of loss or gain, but generally an unexpected advantage. B. Jonson.

WIND'FALL-EN (wind'fal-en), a. Blown down by the wind. "Windfallen sticks." Drayton.

WIND'-FLOW-ER, n. (Bot.) The anemone; — so named from having been thought to open only when the wind was blowing. Johnson.

1. One of the limbs of a bird by which it flies, or which, in a few cases, as that of the ostrich, assist in running only.
How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Matt. xxiii. 37.
In ancient mythology, gods and demons were represented as having wings. In the Bible, they are attributed to angels; and, in Christian art, to devils also. Fairholt.
2. (Ent.) A dry, transparent, and membranous, or an opaque and coriaceous, organ, by which some insects are enabled to fly.

The normal number of wings in insects is four, but in some kinds one pair is rudimentary. In the beetles and some other orders, the anterior pair is laid and horny, forming elytra, or cases for the protection of the posterior wings, which are folded together beneath them. Sometimes the anterior wings are horny or leathery at the base, and membranous towards the summit. At others, all the wings are thin, transparent, and membranous, as in the bees and the dragon-flies. In the butterflies and the moths, they are covered with beautiful feathers or scales. Micrographic Dict.

I was your grandam had a worse match. Shak.

† WIS, ad. Certainly; truly; indeed. Chaucer.

WIS'ARD, n. See WIZARD. Todd.

WIS'DOM (wiz'dom), n. [A. S. wisdom; wis, wise, and dom, judgment; Ger. weisheit; Dan. visdom, visdom; Sw. visdom.]

1. The state of being wise; knowledge practically applied to the best ends, or to the true purposes of life; knowledge united with a disposition to use it for the best purposes; the power or act of judging rightly; sagacity; sapience; prudence; discernment; judicious conduct.

Two things speak much of the wisdom of a nation; good laws and a prudent management of them. Stillingfleet.

Wisdom is that which makes men judge what are the best ends, and what the best means to attain them. Temple.

Wisdom makes all the troubles, griefs, and pains incident to life, whether casual adversities or natural afflictions, easy and supportable, by rightly valuing the importance and moderating the influence of them. Barrow.

The wisdom of the Deity, as testified in the works of creation, surpasses all ideas we have of wisdom drawn from the highest intellectual operations of the highest class of intelligent beings with whom we are acquainted; and (which is of the chief importance to us) whatever be its compass or extent, which it is evidently impossible that we should be able to determine, it must be adequate to the conduct of that order of things under which we live. Paley.

2. The religious sentiment; fear and love of God; duty to God.

So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom. Psa. xc. 12.

Syn. — Wisdom is a word from the Anglo-Saxon; sapientia, from the Latin, is little used. Wisdom is a much higher and more comprehensive term than prudence or sagacity, and it is a divine as well as a human quality. We speak of the divine wisdom and of human wisdom; also of human (but not divine) prudence and sagacity; and of the sagacity of a dog. Wisdom is active, prudence passive. Wisdom leads one to what is most proper, prudence prevents one from doing what is improper. "Wisdom is the right use or exercise of knowledge, and differs from knowledge as the use which is made of a power or faculty differs from the power or faculty itself." Fleming. — "In strictness of language there is a difference between knowledge and wisdom; wisdom always supposing action, and action directed by it." Paley.

Knowledge and wisdom, far from being one, Have ofttimes no connection. Knowledge dwells In heads replete with thoughts of other men, Wisdom is more than knowledge, and is shown in action. Cowper.

WÍSE (wiz), a. [A. S. wis; Dut. wijs; Ger. weise; Dan. & Sw. vis; Icel. vis. — Sansc. vid. — See WIT, v. n.]

1. Having wisdom; sapient; judging rightly; discreet; prudent; judicious; sagacious.

A wise son maketh a glad father. Prov. xv. 20.

2. Judging well from experience; practically or experimentally knowing or acquainted.

I would have you wise unto that which is good, and simple concerning evil. Rom. xvi. 19.

It is usually seen that the wisest men are about the things of this world, the less wise they are about the things of the next. Gibson.

Where ignorance is bliss, 'Tis folly to be wise. Gray.

3. Becoming a wise man; sage; grave.
One eminent in wise deport spoke much. Milton.

4. † Skilled in hidden arts or knowledge. ["A sense somewhat ironical."] Johnson.

Pray, was't not the wise woman of Brentford? Shak.

5. Crafty; cunning; subtle; wily. [R.]

He taketh the wise in their own craftiness. Job v. 15.

† To make wise, to make believe, to pretend; to feign. Puttenham — Never, or none, the wise, without intelligence or information, — whether the circumstance or event not disclosed could, by its communication, contribute to wisdom or not. "The Pretender or Duke of Cambridge may both be lauded, and I never the wiser." Swift.

Syn. — See POLITICAL, SAGACITY, SENSIBLE.

WÍSE (wiz), n. [A. S. wise; Dut. wijs; Ger. weise; Dan. vis; Sw. vis. — It. guisa; Fr. guise. — See GUISE.] Manner; way of being or acting.

Fair marching forth in honorable wise. Spenser.

On this wise ye shall bless Israel. Nem. vi. 23.

'Tis in no wise strange that such a one should believe that things were blindly shuffled. Woodward.

— It is obsolete or antiquated except in compounds; as, lengthwise, sidewise, often corrupted into lengthways, sideways, &c.

1. To have strong desire; to desire; to long; — frequently followed by for.

And much he wished, but durst not ask, to part. Parnell.

This is as good an argument as an antiquary could wish for. Arbutnot.

2. To be disposed or inclined.

Those potentates who do not wish well to his affairs have shown respect to his personal character. Addison.

3. To hope or to fear in a slight degree.

I wish it may not prove some ominous token. Sidney.

WÍSH, v. a. 1. To desire; to long or hanker after.

What ardently we wish we soon believe. Young.

Let what we wish, but what we want, Let mercy still supply. Merrick.

2. † To recommend by wishing.

He says he was wished to a very wealthy widow. Old Play.

I would not wish them to a fairer death. Shak.

3. To imprecate, or call down upon; to invoke.

If Heaven have any grievous plagues in store Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee. Shak.

4. † To ask; to request; to seek.

Digby should find the best way to make Antrim communicate the affair to him, and to wish his assistance. Clarendon.

WÍSH, n. 1. Desire; a longing; a hankering.

Thy wish was father, Harry, to that thought. Shak.

There is some help for all the defects of fortune; for, if a man cannot attain to the length of his wishes, he may have his remedy by cutting of them shorter. Cowley.

2. The thing desired; object of desire.

What next I bring shall please thee, be assured,
That I henceforth shall be thy other self.

Milton.

Desire, in a lax sense, respects only actions and events that depend not on us; as when I desire that my friend may have a son to represent him, or that my country may flourish in arts and sciences, but such internal act is more properly termed a wish than a desire." Ld. Kaimes.

"A wish is an inactive desire. It is the result of that longing after happiness so natural to man, in cases where no expectations can be formed, no efforts can be made." Cogan.

Syn. — See DESIRE.

WISH'ABLE, a. That may be wished for or desired, desirable. [R.] Udal.

WIT, v. n. [Goth. & A. S. witan; Dut. weetan.]

1. † To know, or to be known.

Moreover, brethren, we do you to wit of the grace of God bestowed on the churches of Macedonia. 2 Cor. viii. 1.

2. (Law.) A word used to call attention to something particular, or as introductory to a detailed statement of what has been just before mentioned generally. Burhill.

It is now used only in the infinitive to wit, when it is an adverbial phrase, implying namely, videlicet, or scilicet; or it is used as a formal expression by which a call is made to know or to witness the legal setting forth of something that follows. — See WIS.

WIT, n. [A. S. wit; Ger. witz; Dan. vid.]

1. † The intellectual faculties or mental powers; the intellect; the understanding.

Will puts in practice what the wit deviseth;
Will ever acts, and wit contemplates still. Davies.

2. Sense; judgment; wisdom; sagacity. [R.]

Thou shalt have the wit to be a good wine,
Thou shalt have the wit to be a good wine. Dryden.

3. A power or faculty of the mind or intellect, considered singly; as, "To lose one's wits."

Thou hast more of the wild goose in one of thy wits than I have in my whole five. Shak.

4. † A superior degree of intelligence or understanding; a quick and brilliant reason.

I take not wit in that common acceptance, whereby men understand some sudden flashes of genius, which are the property of a few, but I take it in the sense of a steady and constant power of reasoning, which is the property of all. Ep. Reynolds.

Low, shallow, hairbrained hufts make atheism and contempt of religion the only badge and character of wit. South.

5. Imagination, or the power of original combination under the influence of the imagination; the imaginative faculty; genius.

The composition of wit is not to be confined to the species or ideas of those things which it designs to represent, but it is to be free and untrammelled in the writer, which it searches over all the memory for the species or ideas of those things which it designs to represent. Dryden.

6. A peculiar faculty of the mind, connected with the more comprehensive faculty of imagination, by which pleasing but occult or remote resemblances are traced between things apparently unlike — the exercise of this faculty, or the association of ideas produced by it; humor; pleasantry; facetiousness.

For the qualities of sheer wit and humor, Swift had no superior, ancient or modern. Leigh Hunt.

Men who have a great deal of wit, and prompt memories, are not always the best judges of wit. Leigh Hunt.

7. A man of genius or humor; a humorist.

How vain that second life in others' breath,
The estate which wits inherit after death! Pope.

"Wit may be divided into two sorts, serious and comical. First, with respect to that which is serious or grave: the original signification of the Saxon word signifies wisdom; and therefore a witty was anciently a wise man, and so late as the reign of Elizabeth, a man of great wit signified a man of great judgment; and, indeed, we still say, if a man has the use of his reason, that he is in his wits, and, if the contrary, that he is out of his wits. Serious wit, therefore, is neither more nor less than quick wisdom, or, according to Pope,

"Wit is a nature to advantage dress'd."
Wit is a nature to advantage dress'd. Pope.

Second, as to comic wit: this is the general acceptance of wit among us, and is of the easiest kind; for it is much more easy to raise a laugh, than to excite admiration by quick wisdom. . . . This wit in writing consists in an assimilation of remote ideas oddly or humorously connected, as in the poem of Hudibras, &c.; but more particularly comic wit is applied to speaking and conversation, and the definition of Pope may be adopted: "It is a quick conception and an easy delivery."

In order to have wit for this purpose, the principal requisites are, a good imagination, a fund of ideas and words, and a fluency of speech; but all these will be insufficient, unless the speaker know how to adapt his remarks, and replies to particular persons, times, and occasions; and, indeed, if he would be truly witty, he must know the world, and be remarkably quick in suiting the smallest word or term of an expression to the subject." Burnet.

The following enumeration of the different forms of wit is given by the celebrated Dr. Isaac Barrow: —

"Sometimes it lieth in pat allusion to a known story, or in reasonable application of a trivial saying, or in forging an apposite tale; sometimes it playeth in words and phrases, taking advantage from the ambiguity of their sense, or the affinity of their sound; sometimes it is wrapped up in a dress of humorous expression; sometimes it lurketh under an odd similitude; sometimes it is lodged in a sly question, in a smart answer, in a quirkish reason, in a shrewd intimation, in cunningly diverting or cleverly retorting an objection; sometimes it is couched in a bold scheme of speech, in a tart irony, in a lusty hyperbole, in a startling metaphor, in a plausible reconciling of contradictions, or in acute nonsense, sometimes a scenical representation of persons or things, a counterfeit speech, a mimical look or gesture, passeth for it, sometimes an affected simplicity, sometimes a presumptuous bluntness, giveth it being, sometimes it riseth only from a lucky hitting upon what is strange, sometimes from a crafty wresting obvious matter to the purpose. Often it consisteth in one knows not what, and springeth up one can hardly tell how. Its ways are unaccountable and inexplicable, being answerable to the numberless roivings of fancy and windings of language."

At one's wit's end, without expedients or contrivance. "I am at my wit's end for fear of any sudden surprise." Addison. — † The five wits, a phrase sometimes used synonymously with the five senses, but more commonly distinguished from them, and said to be common wit, imagination, fantasy, judgment, and memory. Shak. Davies. — † Wit, whether wit thou? a sort of proverbial expression used chiefly to express a want of command over the fancy or inventive faculty. Shak. Decker.

Syn. — The forms both of wit and humor are so various, that it is difficult to include them within the circle of a precise definition. Dr. Trusler says, "Wit relates to the matter, humor to the manner, that our old comedies abounded with wit, and our old actors with humor." — "Wit," says Dr. Combe, "is that which excites agreeable surprise in the mind, from the strange assemblage of related images presented to it." It is used to excite laughter or mirth by ludicrous images and representations of the matters treated of. Humor is less poignant and brilliant, and much less likely to be offensive than wit, and it is always agreeable. "In conversation," says Sir William Temple, "humor is more than wit, easiness more than knowledge."

WITCH, n. [A. S. wicca; Frs. wikke; Dut. wigchelwarte.] — Low L. vegerus, a sorcerer.] A person supposed to have formed a compact with evil spirits, and by their means to operate supernaturally; — formerly applied to persons of either sex, but now only to women; a sorceress.

There was a man in that city whose name was Simon, a witch that had deceived the folk of Samaria. Wickliffe.

The wicked witch now seeing all this while
The doubtful balance equally to sway,
What not by right, she cast to win by guile. Spenser.

It is not a hundred years since the conjuration of witches, demons and devils was commonly practised and taught in England. J. Richardson, 1778.

gemot, a meeting.] (Ant.) The supreme council or parliament of the Anglo-Saxon nation, composed of the king, the gentry, knights, bishops, and abbots. Bosworth.

The word "wit" has lost its original significance of wisdom.
Wit is now used in a descriptive or of the merit of its members, or of their wisdom. Gent. Mag.

WITII (with), prep. [Goth. mith; A. S. with, mid, mith; Dut. met; Ger. mit; Dan. ved, med; Sw.
vid, med; Icel. vid, med, meðr. — "With has descended to us from two different A. S. verbs, viz., witthan, to join, and weorðan, wyrðan, to be. From the latter we have the compounds with-in and with-out; i. e. be in, be out. . . . Generally speaking, when with denotes instrument, cause, means, it is the imperative of wyrðan, to be. When it denotes union, conjunction, it is the imperative of witthan, to join." Richardson.]

By, — expressing the relation of joining or connection, the nature of the connection, as of cause, means, comparison, confederacy, &c., being shown by the context, and the import of the proposition itself remaining the same.

With my body I thee worship. Common Prayer.

3. To honor with extravagant regard; to admire beyond bounds; to idolize.

With bended knees I daily worship her,
Yet she consumes her own idolater. Carew.

The following derivatives from worship are commonly written with the p doubled; thus, worshipped, worshipping, worshipper: though they would be more analogically written with but one p; thus, worshiped, worshiping, worshiper; and some write them in this manner. But the p is doubled in nearly or quite all the English dictionaries except that of Perry, who, in his Dictionary [1805] spells worshiper.

"At present we 'worship' none but God; there was a time when the word was employed in so much more general a sense that it was not profane to say that God 'worshipped,' that is, honored, man." Trench.
Syn. — See ADORE.

WORSHIP (wür'ship), v. n. To perform acts of adoration; to perform offices of reverence or religious service. 1 Kings xii. 30.

WOR'THY (wür'thē), n. A man of worth, merit, or valor; a deserving man. Dryden.

The History of the Worthies of England. Thomas Fuller.

The Nine Worthies of the world, so reputed, are classed by R. Burton, in a book published in 1687, as follows: Hector, Alexander, Julius Cæsar, (Gentiles); Joshua, David, Judas Maccabeus, (Jews); Arthur, Charlemagne, and Goughy of Britain, (Christians.) Nares.

† WOR'THY (wür'thē), v. a. To render worthy; to exalt; to ennoble. Shak.

† WÖT [wöt, S. W. P. J. F. Ja. K. Sm.; wüt, Elphinstone], v. a. & n. To know. Spenser.

I wot that Henry is no soldier. Shak.

It is also the preterite of the obsolete verb to wet; and is used by old authors both in the present and imperfect tenses. — See WEET.

† WÖTE, v. a. & n. To know. — See Wot. Chaucer.

† WOUL, v. n. To howl. Wickliffe.

WOULD (wäd), v. auxiliary and defective. Implying inclination, wish, or desire.

It is regarded as the preterite of will, and is used to form the past tense of the potential mood; but it is likewise used in the conditional present tense.

"He would have paid the bill yesterday, if he had been able." "He would pay it now, if he could." In the former instance, would is used in the past tense; and in the latter, in the conditional present.

Would is used in a particular manner to express a wish or prayer, as in the phrases would God, would to God, would to Heaven, or simply would; as, "Would God I had died for thee, O Absalom." 2 Sam. "Would to God you could bear with me." 2 Cor. "Would to Heaven." Dryden. "Would thou hadst hearkened to my words." Milton. "Would that they would take one side or the other." Dr. Thomas Arnold.

"Would has the signification of I wish, or I pray. This, I believe, is improper, and formed by a gradual corruption of the phrase would God; which originally imported, that God would, might God will, might God decree. From this phrase, ill understood, came 'would to God'; thence 'I would to God'; and thence I would, or, elliptically, would came to signify I wish; — and so it is used even by good authors, but ought not to be imitated." Johnson.

WOULD-BÈ (wäd'bē), a. Wishing to be; vainly pretending to be. [Colloquial.] Qu. Rev.

2. Breach or hurt of the bark and wood of a tree or other plant. Wright.

3. Injury; hurt; damage; harm; as, "A wound given to one's reputation."

"The first pronunciation of this word [wënd] though generally received among the polite world, is certainly a capricious novelty, — a novelty either generated by false criticism, to distinguish it from the preterite of the verb to wind, of which there was not the least danger of interference, or more probably from an affectation of the French sound of this diphthong, which, as in pour, and some other words, we find of late to have prevailed. The stage is in possession of this sound, and what Swift observes of newspapers, with respect to the introduction of new and fantastical words, may be applied to the stage, with respect to new and fantastical modes of pronunciation. Y.

Y the twenty-fifth letter of the alphabet, is borrowed from the Greek Υ , and is at the beginning of words and syllables a consonant, and in other situations a vowel, having the sound of i, and subject to the changes of this letter. It is used instead of i at the end of words, as thy; or when two *i*s would come together, as in dying; and sometimes for the sake of distinction, as in the words die and dye. As a numeral it has been used to denote 150, and with a dash over it (Υ), 150,000. Υ is also a corruption of the A. S. ge, as, y-bore, y-clept, &c., i. e. bore, clept, &c.—See GE.

YÄC'CA—WOOD (-wäd), n. An ornamental wood of a small tree in Jamaica; the Podocarpus yacca, used for cabinet purposes. Simmonds.

YACHT (yöt) [yöt, S. W. P. J. F. J. K. Sm.; yät, E. Kenrick], n. [Dut. yagt; Ger. yacht; Dan. yagt; Sw. yakt.—From Dut. yagten, to hasten, to pursue eagerly, Skinner and Lye suggest, and applied to the vessel from its aptness for speed.] A small ship or vessel of state, usually employed to convey princes, ambassadors, or other great personages, from one kingdom to another:—a name also given to a private pleasure vessel when sufficiently large for a sea-voyage. Mar. Dict.

Syn.—See VESSEL.

YACHT'ER (yöt'er), n. One who commands or who sails in a yacht. Lady Blessington.

YACHT'ING (yöt'ing), n. The act of making a voyage or excursion in a yacht. Clarke.

YÄ'GER, n. [Ger. jäger, a hunter; jagen, to chase, to hunt.] (Mit.) One of the light infantry armed with rifles;—written also jager. Brande.

YÄ'HÖÖ, n. A name given in a satirical romance by Swift to one of a race of brutes having the form of man. They are contrasted with the Houyhnhnms, or horses endowed with reason.

YÄK, n. (Zool.) An animal of the bovine family, which grunts like a pig, a native of the mountains or snowy regions of Thibet, having horns curved outwards on the occipital ridge, hairy nose, and tail covered with long hair; the grunting ox; earlyk; bulul; Poephagus grunniens of Linnaeus, or Bos Poephagus of Colonel H. Smith. Eng. Cyc.

There are several varieties of the yaks, as the Noble Yak, the Wild Yak, the Plough Yak, &c. The bushy, white tail of the yak is much esteemed in the East, where it is borne as an emblem of authority, and used as a fly-flapper. Eng. Cyc. Simmonds.

YÄM, n. (Bot.) The common name of monocotyledonous, twining shrubs of the genus Dioscorea, growing mostly in tropical climates:—a tuberous root, of various species, of the genus Dioscorea, abounding in farinaceous matter, and used as an article of food. Baird.

Dioscorea sativa, Dioscorea alata, &c., yield the common yams. The tubers are oblong, brown externally, white internally, and often very large, weighing sometimes as much as 30 lbs. They are used as a substitute for potatoes in tropical climates. Dioscorea globosa is a native of India, and is considered the best of Indian yams.—Dioscorea Japonica, with long and slender tubers, has recently been introduced into France and the United States as a substitute for the potato. Gray. Baird.

YÄMA, n. [Hind. yam, to restrain,—as restraining mortals from evil by the fear of punishment.] (Hindoo Myth.) A deity, represented as king of justice, provided with a cord or noose, as executioner, presiding over the Narakas, or places of future punishment. J. C. Thomson.

descends to one of the Narakas, or is born again on earth in the body, either of men, beasts, or vegetables, &c., according to its offences. J. C. Thomson.

YÄNK, v. a. To jerk. [Local, U. S.] Bartlett.

YÄN'KEE (yäng'ke), n. A cant term for an inhabitant or native of New England, but sometimes applied by foreigners to an inhabitant or native of any part of the United States.

Different etymologies have been assigned to this word; but that of Heckewelder is perhaps the most probable one; viz., that it is a corruption of the word English (or of the French word Anglais) by the Indians of North America, which was pronounced by them Yangees or Yenghees. N. A. Rev. Jamieson, in his "Dictionary of the Scottish Language," has the word yankie, which he defines as follows:—"A sharp, clever woman, at the same time including an idea of forwardness."

A Yankee, John, beware to laugh:

My name is not a laughing matter.

By the bye, I am a Yankee.

J. C. Richmond.

YÄRD, n. [A. S. gyrd, gird, gyrda, gyrde, geard, a staff, rod.]

1. The English and American unit of length, of which all other measures of length are parts and multiples, and of which one third part is a foot. Act of Parliament, June, 1824. Burrill.

Originally uncertain length was denoted by a yard. As a linear measure the yard varies considerably in different parts of the British kingdom: at Hertford the land-yard is 3 feet, at Saltash, 16½ feet, at Falmouth and Bridgend, 18 feet, and at Downpatrick, 21 feet. Richardson. Simmonds.

2. † (Arch.) A spear or rafter in a timber-roof. Britton.

3. (Naut.) A long piece of timber suspended on the masts of a ship, to extend the sails to the wind. Naut. Dict.

4. (Astron.) A popular name given to the three stars in the belt of Orion;—called also Golden Yard. Hutton.

YÄRD, n. [M. Goth. gards; A. S. geard; Dut. gaard; Dan. gaard; Sw. gård.—From A. S. gyrdan, to gird. Richardson.—See GARDEN, ORCHARD.] A small piece of enclosed ground, usually one adjoining a house; an enclosure of ground for any purpose, as a brick-yard, a navy-yard, a cow-yard, a barn-yard, &c. Dryden.

Yard of land. See YARDLAND.—Liberty of the yard, a liberty sometimes granted to a person imprisoned for a debt, of going in the prison-yard or within other prescribed limits, on his giving a bond not to pass beyond those limits.

YÄRD, v. a. To enclose in a yard; to shut up in a yard, as cattle; as, "To yard cows."

YÄW, n. (Naut.) A temporary deviation of a ship from the direct line of the course. Mar. Dict.

YÄW, v. n. (Naut.) To steer wild or out of the line of the course, as a ship. Mar. Dict.

YÄWL, n. (Naut.) A kind of boat, rather narrow, and usually rowed with four or six oars;—written also yaul. Mar. Dict.

YÄWL, v. n. To cry out; to yell. [R.] Fairfax.

YÄWN, v. n. [A. S. geonan, geonian, gynian; Dut. geuonen; Ger. gähnen; Icel. gingina.—Gr. γᾰῖνω; L. hio, hians.] [i. YÄWNED; pp. YÄWNING, YÄWNED.]

1. To open the mouth, as in drowsiness, dullness, fatigue, ennui, &c.; to gape; to oscitate. When a man yawneth, he cannot hear so well. Bacon.

2. To open wide. "The yawning cliff." Prior.

3. To express desire by yawning. [R.]

The chiefest thing at which lay reformers yawn is, that the clergy may, through conformity in condition, be poor as the apostles were. Hooker.

Syn.—See GAPE.

YÄWN, n. 1. The act of yawning; an involuntary opening of the jaws from drowsiness, ennui, or dullness; oscitation; a gaping. Pope.

2. Act of opening wide. Addison.

YÄWN'ING, p. a. 1. That yawns; gaping; opening wide. "The yawning grave." Churchill.

2. Sleepy; slumbering. Shak.

YÄWN'ING, n. The act of one who yawns. Yawning has been conceived to be owing to torpor in the pulmonary circulation. Dunghison.

YÄWŞ, n. pl. (Med.) A disease of the Antilles and of Africa, characterized by tumors of a contagious character, which resemble strawberries, raspberries, or champignons, ulcerate, and are accompanied by emaciation;—called also fram-bossia. The disease differs somewhat in America and Africa. Dunghison.

Y-CLÄD' (e-kläd'), p. for clad. Clothed. Shak.

The y is an old English particle prefixed to participles, from the Anglo-Saxon ge.

Y-CLÉPED' (e-klépt'), p. Called; named. Come thou goddess fair and free, In heaven ycleped Euphrosyne. Milton.

† Y DRAD' (ə-drād'), p. Dreaded. Spenser.

YĒ, pron. [A. S. ge.] The nominative pl. of thou.
It is never used but where the plural is really meant, and generally only in the solemn style. It was formerly used, especially in poetry, in the objective case, as, "Vain pomp and glory of the world, I hate ye." Shak.

|| YEA (yā or yē) [yā, S. J. E. Ja. K. Sm. R. C.; yē, W. P. I. Vb.; yā or yē, F.], ad. [M. Goth. ja, jai; A. S. gea; Dut., Ger., Dan., Sw., & Icel. ja. — W. te.]

1. Yes; ay; — a particle expressing affirmation or assent; — correlative to nay.

Whilst one says only yea, and t' other ay. Denham.
Yea sometimes serves to introduce a subject with the sense of truly, verily, indeed.

Yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden? Gen. iii. 1.

2. A particle by which the sense of something preceding is enforced; not only so, but more.

I am weary, yea, my memory is tired. Shak.

This word is antiquated, being now rarely used except in the solemn style. Yea and ay, formerly in use, belong to the solemn style, now superseded by yes and no. — Yea and ay were formerly sometimes used to connect clauses of sentences with similar import. "A good man always profits by his endeavor; yea, when he is absent; ay, when he is dead, by his example and memory." B. Jonson

"Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Fry pronounce this word so as to rhyme with pay, say, &c.; but Steele or Brightland, Dr. Jones, who wrote the 'New Art of Spelling,' in Queen Anne's time, Dr. Kenrick, and Mr. Perly, pronounce it like the pronoun ye. Though so many are against me, I do not hesitate to pronounce the latter mode the best; first, as it is more agreeable to the general sound of the diphthong; next, as it is more related to its familiar substitute yes; and, lastly, unless my memory greatly fails me, because it is always so pronounced when contrasted with ay; as in that precept of the gospel, 'Let your communication be yea, yea, and ay, ay.'" Walker.

Most of the orthoepists more recent than Walker pronounce this word yā.

Syn. — See INDEED.

|| YEA, or YĒA, n. 1. An affirmative vote, or one who votes in the affirmative; ay. Hastell.

2. A term denoting stability and certainty.
All the promises of God in him are yea, and in him amen, unto the glory of God by us. 1 Cor. ii. 20.

Yea and nay, the votes of members of a legislative body voting in the affirmative and negative of a proposition as given orally by answering yea or nay when their names are called, and as recorded in a list of their names.

† YĒAD, or YĒDE, v. n. [ē. YODE.] To go; to march; to proceed. — See YĒDE. Spenser.

YĒAN, v. n. [A. S. eanian, qeane.] [ē. YEANED; pp. YEANING, YEANED.] To bring forth young, as a sheep; to lamb. Dryden.

YĒANED (yēnd), p. a. Brought forth, as a lamb. "The new-yeaned lamb." Fletcher.

YĒAN'LING, n. The young of sheep; a lamb. [R.] All the yeanelings which were streaked and pled. Shak.

YĒAR (yār), n. [M. Goth. jer; A. S. gear; Dut. jaar; Frs. jer; Ger. jahr; Dan. aar; Sw. ar; Icel. ár.]

1. A system or cycle of several months, usually twelve months, or the interval of time in which the sun moves through the twelve signs of the ecliptic. Hutton.

2. A period or space of time measured by the revolution of some celestial body in its orbit. Thus the interval of time between two successive returns of Jupiter to the same point in the zodiac is the year of Jupiter. Hutton.

Lunar year, the space of twelve lunar months. — Lunar astronomical year, a year consisting of twelve lunar synodical months, being shorter than the solar year by about ten days and twenty-one hours. This difference is the foundation of the epoch. — Lunar civil year is either common or embolismic. The common lunar year consists of twelve lunar civil months, or 354 days. The embolismic or intercalary lunar year consists of thirteen lunar civil months, or 384 days. — Civil year, civil solar year. See SOLAR. — Common civil year, a year consisting of 365 days. — Bissextile or leap year, a year consisting of 366 days, and occurring every fourth year. It has one intercalary day, introduced at the end of February, which month in leap year consists of twenty-nine days. — Julian year, a year consisting of 365 days, with an additional day every fourth year, or every year divisible by four without remainder. See STYLE. — Gregorian year, the Julian year corrected by this rule, — that instead of every secular or hundredth year being bissextile, only every fourth secular year is bissextile. See STYLE. — Anomaleptic year, the interval of time between two successive returns of the earth to its perihelion, being longer than the sidereal year by 4 minutes and 39.7 seconds. — Solar year, civil solar year, sidereal year, tropical year. See SOLAR.

Year originally denoted a revolution, and was not limited to that of the sun. Accordingly it is found by the oldest accounts that people have at different times expressed other revolutions by it particularly that of the moon; and consequently that the years of some accounts are to be reckoned only months, and sometimes periods of two, or three, or four months. Hutton.

YĒAR'-BOOK (yār'hák), n. 1. A book of law reports published annually. Blackstone.

The year-books are the oldest English reports extant, beginning with the reign of Edward II., and ending with the reign of Henry VIII. They derive their name from the fact of having been published, and are called by old law writers "books of the years and terms." They consist of eleven parts or volumes, written in law French, and extend over a period of nearly two hundred years. The series is, however, in some parts broken. Burrill.

2. Any book published yearly, and giving an account of events occurring during the year, or of facts relating to any subject, as a year-book of facts, a turf-register, &c. Simmonds.

† YĒARED (yērd), a. Containing years. B. Jonson.

YĒAR'LING, n. An animal a year old, or in the second year of its age. Ash.

YĒAR'LY, a. 1. Annual; occurring once every year. "A yearly solemn feast." Spenser.

2. Lasting a year. Prior.

Syn. — Yearly is from the Anglo-Saxon, and annual from the Latin; and they both signify happening every year, anniversary, returning with the revolution of the year. Yearly course, annual rent; half-yearly rent; annual plant or publication; an anniversary holiday or celebration.

YĒAR'LY, ad. Annually; once a year; every year. "Blessings yearly showered." Dryden.

YĒARN (yērn), v. n. [A. S. geornian, ginnan, gyrnan; georn, desirous, eager.] [ē. YEARNED; pp. YEARNING, YEARNED.] To feel great intellectual uneasiness from longing, tenderness, or pity; to feel a strong desire.

Your mother's heart yearns towards you. Addison.

YĒARN, v. a. To grieve; to pain; to vex. [R.] It would yearn your heart to see it. Shak.

† YĒARN'FUL, a. Mournful. Damon and Pythias.

YĒARN'ING, n. The act or the state of one who yearns; earnest or strong desire. Spectator.

YĒARN'INGS, n. pl. The maws or stomachs of young calves, used as rennet for curdling milk. [Scotland.] Simmonds.

† YĒARTH, n. The earth. Chaucer.

YĒAST (yēst), n. [A. S. gist; Dut. gist, gest; Ger. gäsch. — Mid. L. gesta, gistum.] The mass which rises to the surface during the fermentation of grape juice, infusion of malt, or other similar liquids; barm used for leavening bread; spume; froth; ferment. Gregory.

A multitude of small, oval, organized bodies, which do not exceed one two hundred and fiftieth of an inch in diameter, and which, when viewed under the microscope, are seen to consist of nucleated cells, form the essential constituent of yeast. The property for which it is chiefly valued is that of exciting the vinous fermentation in saccharine liquids, and in various farinaceous substances. Miller. Wood & Bach.

The presence of yeast, though it is insoluble, is sufficient to cause the resolution of sugar into carbonic acid and alcohol, a decomposition which can be effected by no other means. Graham.

"The old spelling and pronunciation (yēst) seem to have quite yielded to those here given, (yēast)." Smart.

YĒAST'Y, a. Pertaining to, containing, or resembling, yeast. For. Qu. Rev.

† YĒDE, v. n. [A. S. gangead.] [ē. YODE.] To go; to march; to proceed. Spenser.

YĒLK [yēlk, W. J. Ja. K. Sm. C.; yōk, S. F.; yōk or yōk, P.], n. [A. S. gealew, yellow; geola, yolk.] The yellow part of an egg. — See YOLK. Bacon.

This word is often written both yolk and yōlk. Yolk is preferred by Martin, Johnson, Nares, Walker, and Webster; yolk, by Bailey, Jameson, Richardson, and Smart. "It is commonly pronounced, and often written, yolk." Johnson. "Johnson seems justly to have preferred the mode [yolk] of writing and pronouncing this word as more agreeable both to etymology and the best usage." Walker. "The old form yolk appears to have gone out of use." Smart. "Yolk is the proper word, yolk is a corruption." Webster.

YĒLL, v. n. [A. S. gyllan, gyllan; Dut. gillen; Frs. gailhen; Ger. gullen, to sound, gall, a sound.] [ē. YELLED; pp. YELLING, YELLED.] To cry out with a hideous noise, or with horror and agony; to scream. "Yelling monsters." Milton.

The night raven, that still deadly yells. Spenser.

YĒLL, v. a. To utter with a yell. Shak.

YĒLL, n. A loud, hideous outcry; a scream.

With like measure went and down yells
A hundred thousand. Shak.

YĒLL'ING, n. The act or the noise of one who, or that which, yells. Hackluyt.

YĒL'LŌW (yē'l'lo) [yē'l'lo, W. P. J. F. Ja. K. Sm. R.; yē'l'lo, S. Nares, Scott], a. [A. S. geleu, gealew; Dut. geel; Ger. gelb; Dan. gul; Sw. gul. — It. giallo; Old Fr. gialne; Fr. jaune. — See GOLD.] Being of a bright, gold-like color; of the color of gold. "The yellow sheaf." Milton.

Scarcely seen, he wades among the yellow broom. Thomson.

"Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Nares, Mr. Scott, Dr. Jones, and Mr. Fry pronounce this word as if written yello, rhyming with tallow. But Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Perly preserve the e in its pure sound, and rhyme the word with mellow. The latter mode is, in my opinion, clearly the best, both as more agreeable to analogy and the best usage; for I am much deceived if the former pronunciation do not border closely on the vulgar." Walker.

YĒL'LŌW, n. Yellow color; the color of gold; one of the three primary colors. — See PRIMARIES.

Chrysanthemum (Ch-m.) a yellow pigment consisting of chloride of gold. — King's yellow, a mixture of arsenious acid and tersulphide of arsenic, or orpiment. Miller.

YĒL'LŌW, v. a. To make or render yellow. Shak.

YĒL'LŌW, v. n. To become yellow. Dyer.

YĒL'LŌW-BIRD, n. (Ornith.) A small incessant bird of the family Fringillidae, or finches; Fringilla tristis of Linnæus, or Carduelis americana of Brisson. The summer plumage of the male is a rich lemon yellow, fading into white towards the rump, black wings and tail, the former tipped and edged with white. In winter the yellow is changed to a brown olive. Wilson.

YĒL'LŌW-BLŌSS'OMED (-blōs'sōmd), a. Having yellow blossoms or flowers. Goldsmith.

YĒL'LŌW-BŌY, n. A cant name for a guinea, eagle, or other gold coin. Arbutnot.

YĒL'LŌW-BRĒAST'ED, a. Having a yellow breast, as a bird. III.

YĒL'LŌW-BŪNT'ING, n. (Ornith.) A conirostral, passerine bird of brilliant plumage, the head and breast being of a fine lemon-yellow color, and the back of a rich chestnut-brown; yellow-hammer; Emberiza citrinella. Yarrell.

YĒL'LŌW-CŌPP'ER-AS, n. (Min.) A translucent, yellow mineral, of pearly lustre, occurring in small grains, and consisting chiefly of sulphuric acid, sesquioxide of iron, and water; — called also copiapite. Dana.

YĒL'LŌW-ĒARTH, n. A massive, dull, soft mineral, of a ochre-yellow color, adhering to the tongue, and consisting of silica, alumina, iron, and lime; — sometimes used as a yellow paint, but more frequently made red by calcination, and sold under the names of Prussian red, English red, &c. Cleveland. Ure.

YĒL'LŌW-FĒ'VER, n. (Med.) A very dangerous fever, complicated in its second stage with jaundice, and accompanied by vomiting of black matter; — called also black-comit. It is endemic only within the tropics, but has occurred epidemically in the temperate regions. Dunglison.

YĒL'LŌW-GŌLDŌ, n. A kind of flower. B. Jonson.

YĒL'LŌW-HAĪRED (-hārd), a. Having yellow hair. Clarke.

YĒL'LŌW-HĀM'MER, n. [Ger. ammer, gold- ammer.] (Ornith.) The yellow-bunting. — See YELLOW-BUNTING. Farrell.

“I have ventured to restore to this bird what I believe to have been its first English name, yellow-ammer, although it appears to have been printed yellow-ham and yellow-ham from the days of Dr. William Turner to the present time. The word ammer is a well-known German term for bunting in very common use. . . . Our mode of prefixing the letter h to the word appears to be unnecessary, and even erroneous, and is a notion which has no reference to any quality or quality in the bird.” Farrell.

YĒL'QW-ISN, a. Somewhat yellow. Woodward.

YĒL'QW-NĒSS, n. 1. The state or the quality of being yellow; yellow color. Bacon.
2. † Jealousy. Shak.

YĒL'QW-RĀT'TLE, n. (Bot.) The common name of plants of the genus Rhinanthus, having compressed, ringent corollas. Loudon.

YĒL'QW-RŌŌT, n. (Bot.) A ranunculaceous plant of the genus Xanthorhiza, having roots of a deep yellow color. Loudon.

YĒL'QW-S (-vā'loz), n. pl. 1. A disease in horses; the jaundice. Youtat.
2. A disease fatal to peach-trees. Cole.

YĒL'QW-TŌP, n. (Bot.) A species of herbage; — called also white-top. Farm. Ency.

YĒL'QW-WOOD (-wād), n. (Bot.) A small American tree of the genus Cladrastis, with yellow wood. Gray.

YĒL'QW-WORT (vā'lo-wurt), n. (Bot.) A European plant having bright yellow corollas and scarlet stigmas; Chlora perfoliata. Eng. Cyc.

YĒLP, v. n. [A. S. geolpan.] [Y. YELPED; pp. YELPING, YELPED.] To bark, as a beagle-hound after his prey; to bark; to yaup. Fulke.

YĒLP'ING, n. The barking of a dog. Maunder.

YĒN'ITE, n. (Min.) A brittle, black mineral, of submetallic lustre, sometimes occurring in crystals, and consisting chiefly of silica, sesquioxide of iron, protoxide of iron, and lime. Dana.

YĒND, v. a. To throw. [Local, Eng.] T. Boys.

YĒŌ'MAN (yŏ'man) [yŏ'man, W. P. J. E. F. Ja. K. Sm. R. C. Wb.; yŏm'mun, S. Scott, Smith, Barclay; yŏm'mun, Kenrick], n.; pl. YĒŌ'MEN (yŏ'men). [Of uncertain etymology. — From Frs. gemaw, a villager. Janius. — From Goth. gumu, a man. Serenius. — From A. S. geong, young. Skeinner. Lewis. Smith. — From A. S. gemane. Verstegan. Burritt. Gibbs.]

1. In England, a freeholder under the rank of gentleman; a commoner: — a man of small estate in land; a farmer: — an upper servant in a nobleman's family: — an officer of the king's household: — a ceremonial title given to soldiers, as for their manly bearing. P. Cyc. Smart.

The title of yeoman was formerly one of more dignity than now belongs to it. It signified originally a yeoman, so called from bearing the bow in battle. Fulke.

2. (Naut.) An officer in a vessel of war, having charge of a store-room. Dana.

Yeoman of the guard, a body-guard of the English sovereign, consisting of one hundred men. P. Cyc.

In the United States this word seems not to have any very definite meaning. It is usually put as an addition to the names of parties in declarations and indictments. Burritt. Bouvier.

“However widely etymologists are divided in the derivation of this word, orthoepists are not less different in their pronunciation of it. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Mr. Coote, (author of the ‘Elements of Grammar,’) Steele's Grammar, (published in Queen Anne's time,) Mr. Barclay, Mr. Smith, and Buchanan, pronounce it with the diphthong short, as if written yemman; Dr. Kenrick pronounces it as if written yemman; Mr. Elphinstone (who quotes Langham, the famous reformer of orthography in Queen Elizabeth's time, for the same pronunciation) sounds the eo like ee; and Dr. Jones, the author of the ‘New Art of Spelling,’ in Queen Anne's time, pronounces it in the same manner; to which we may add Ben Jonson, who says that “yeoman” yeoman and jeopardy, were truer written yeman. . . . But W. Johnston, M. Perry, Entick, and Fry pronounce the eo like long open o, as if written yoman; and this last appears to me to be the most received pronunciation. It is that which we constantly hear applied to the king's body-guard, and it is that which has always been the pronunciation on the stage, — an authority, which, in this case, may not, perhaps, improperly be called the best of the public voice. I well remember hearing Mr. Garrick pronounce the word in this manner, in a speech in King Lear: ‘Tell me, fellow, is a madman a gentleman or a yoman.’” Walker.

YĒŌ'MAN-LIKE, a. Like a yeoman. Clarke.

YĒŌ'MAN-LY, a. Pertaining to, or like, a yeoman. “His yeomanly father.” B. Jonson.

YĒŌ'MAN-RY, n. The collective body of yeomen; yeomen collectively. Bacon.

YĒR'GAS, n. A kind of coarse woollen wrapper made for horse-cloths. Summons.

YĒRK [yĕrk, S. W. P. E. K. Sm.; yĕrk or yark, Ja.], v. a. [Of uncertain etymology. — See YERK.] [Y. YERKED; pp. YERKING, YERKED.]

1. To turn out with a quick spring, as a horse his heels in kicking; to jerk; to kick. Shak.
2. † To strike, beat, or lash, with a quick spring of a whip. Spenser.

YĒRK, v. n. 1. To throw out the heels with a quick spring, as a horse; to kick. [R.] Holland.
2. To move with a jerk. [R.] Beau. & Fl.

YĒRN, v. a. See YEARN.

† YĒRN'FUL, a. Melancholy; grievous. Old Play.

YĒR'NŪT, n. A pig-nut; an earth-nut. Clarke.

YĒS [yēs, P. E. Ja. Sm. R. C.; yīs, S. W. J.; yēs or yīs, F. K.], ad. [M. Goth. ja, jai; A. S. gesē, gise, ge, gea; Old Frs. jes; Dut., Ger., Dan., Sw., & Icel. ja; W. ie.] A word of affirmation, assent, or consent; — opposed to no.

Pray, madam, are you married? — Yes. Mae.
“It is, like yes, used as a word of enforcement, signifying even so, not only so, but more.”

This is a fit speech for a general in the head of an army, when going to battle, and it is no less fit speech in the head of a council, upon a deliberation of entrance into a war. Bacon.

Yes, you despise the man to books confined. Pope.

“This word is worn into a somewhat slenderer sound than what is authorized by the orthography; but e and i are frequently interchangeable, and few changes can be better established than this. W. Johnston and Mr. Perry are the only orthoepists, who give the sound of the vowels, that do not mark this change; but Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Nares, Mr. Smith, and Dr. Jones, in his ‘New Art of Spelling,’ confirm this change, and rhyme it with miss, miss, bkiss, &c.” Walker. “It is not probable that a polite speaker would, at this day, even on Mr. Walker's authority, pronounce the word yes, yis.” Jameson.

YĒS-Ā-WĀL', n. A state messenger. [Ind.] Crabb.

YĒST, or YĒST [yĕst, S. W. F. Ja.; yĕst or yĕst, P. J.; yĕst, K. Sm.], n. 1. Foam or scum which collects on beer when fermenting; yeast. Gay.
2. Foam; froth; spume. — See YEAST. Shak.

YĒS'TER, a. [See YESTERDAY.] Of yesterday; next before the present; last; last past. “YĒs-ter sun.” Dryden. “YĒs-ter morn.” Rowe.

“It is not often used except in composition with day or night.”

YĒS'TER-DĀY, or YĒS'TER-DAY [yĕs'ter-dā, W. P. J. E. F. Ja. Sm. R. Wb.; yĕs'ter-dā, S. Kenrick, Nares, Scott], n. [M. Goth. gistradagis; A. S. gystandæg, gestrundæg; Dut. gisteren; Ger. gestern. — L. hesternus.] The day last past; the day next before to-day.

And they said unto him, Yesterday, at the seventh hour, the fever left him. John iv. 22.

“Though yes, from its continual use, is allowably worn into the somewhat easier sound of yis, there is no reason why yesterday should adopt the same change; and though I cannot pronounce this change vulgar, since Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Nares, and Mr. Scott have adopted it, I do not hesitate to pronounce the regular sound, given by W. Johnston, as the more correct and agreeable to the best usage.” Walker.

YĒS'TER-DĀY, ad. On the day last past. Bacon.

YĒS'TER-ĒVE, n. The evening last past; last evening; yester-evening. B. Jonson.

YĒS'TER-ĒVEN-ING, n. The evening last past; last evening; yester-eve. Illove.

YĒS'TERN, a. [Ger. gestern, yesterday.] Of, or pertaining to, yesterday. [R.] Wright.

YĒS'TER-NIGHT (yĕs'tĕr-nīt), n. The night last past; last night. Shak.

YĒS'TER-NIGHT (yĕs'tĕr-nīt), ad. On the night last past; last night. Bacon.

YĒS'TER-NŌŌN, n. Noon of yesterday. Clarke.

YĒS'TER-WĒĒK, n. Last week. [R.] Clarke.

YĒS'TY, a. Frothy; yeasty. — See YEASTY. Shak.

YĒT [yēt, S. W. P. J. E. F. Ja. K. Sm. R. C. Wb.; yēt or yit, Kenrick], conj. [A. S. gyt, get, geot. Gr. ēti. — The imp. of A. S. geatan, getan, to get. Tooke.] Nevertheless; notwithstanding.

The best of us would never suffer their gods to be reviled, were it for a word. Tillotson.

“The e in this word is frequently changed by incorrect speakers into i; but, though this change is agreeable to the best and most established usage in the word yes, in yē it is the mark of incorrectness and vulgarity. Dr. Kenrick is the only orthoepist who gives any countenance to this incorrectness, by admitting it as a second pronunciation; but Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, and Mr. Smith give the regular sound only.” Walker.

Syn. — See HOWEVER.

YĒT, ad. 1. Besides; over and above; in addition. This furnishes us with yet one more reason. Asterbury.

2. Still; at the same time. They attest facts they had heard while they were yet hearthens. Asterbury.

3. Noting extension or continuance. A little longer, yet a little longer. Dryden.

Yet a few days, and these which now appear in youth and beauty, shall be but a few days, and these which now appear in youth and beauty, shall be but a few days. Dryden.

4. Once again; once more. Yet, yet a moment one dim ray of light indulge. Pope.

5. At this time; so soon. These being asked when a man should marry, said, Yet a little longer. Bacon.

6. At least; at all; really. A man that would form a comparison betwixt Quintilian's declamations, if yet they be Quintilian's, and the orations of Tully, would be in danger of forfeiting his discretion. Baker.

7. Still; in a greater degree. The rapine is made yet blacker by the pretence of piety and justice. L'Estrange.

8. Even; after all; — a kind of emphatic addition to a negative. Men may not too rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor yet the evidence against them. Bacon.

9. Hitherto; — sometimes preceded by as. Hope beginning here with a trembling expectation of things far removed, and as yet but only heard of. Hooker.

† YĒVE, v. a. To give. Chaucer.

YEW (yā), n. [A. S. iu; Dut. iijf; Ger. eibe; Old Eng. eugh. — Mid. L. iuvus; Fr. if.] (Bot.) The common name of low, evergreen trees of the genus Taxus, particularly of Taxus baccata, or common yew, common in churchyards in England. Loudon.

The distinguished yew is ever seen; Unchanged his branch, and permanent his green. Prior.
“The yew is of slow growth. The tallest yew in England is in the churchyard at Harlington, near Hounslow, and is fifty-eight feet high. Eng. Cyc.

“The wood of the yew is close and fine in the grain, exceedingly durable, and capable of taking a high polish. It was formerly extensively used for making bows. Tomlinson.

“The American yew is a low and straggling or prostrate bush, never forming an ascending trunk. Gray.

Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not. Ecc. xii. 1.

Youth is eminently the fittest season for establishing habits of industry. Dr. Parr.

The charms of youth at once are seen and past,
And Nature says, "They are too sweet to last."
And be cheered by the salutes of youth. Cowper.

2. A young man; one in youth.

The pious chief
A hundred youths from all his train elects. Dryden.

A youth to fortune and to fame unknown. Gray.

3. Young persons collectively.

It is fit to read the best authors to youth first. B. Johnson.

YOUTHFUL (yuth'ful), a. 1. Being in youth; young. "Two youthful knights." Dryden.

2. Pertaining or suitable to youth. "Youthful vigor." Dryden. "Youthful thoughts." Milton. "A youthful face." Pope.

3. Vigorous or active, as in youth. Bentley.
Syn. — Youthful is opposed to aged; young, to old; juvenile and puerile, to manly. Youthful vigor or employment; a young man; a juvenile performance or exercise; puerile conduct or observation. Juvenile is used indifferently, in a good or bad sense; youthful, commonly, in a good, and puerile, in a bad sense.

YOUTHFUL-LY, ad. In a youthful manner; after the manner of youth. Johnson.

YOUTHFULNESS, n. The state or the quality of being youthful; juvenility. Holland.

ZÄ'MITE, n. (Pal.) A name applied to fossil plants of the genus Zamia. Lyell.

ZÄ-NÖ'NI-A, n. (Bot.) A tree of Malabar. Crabb.

ZÄN'TE-WOOD (-wüd), n. A name given to two plants, the Rhus cotinus, and the Chloroxylon Swietenia. Simmonds.

ZÄN-THO-PIC'RINE, n. (Chem.) A bitter crystalline substance obtained from the bark of Xanthoxylum Clava Herculis. Gregory.

ZÄN-THÖX'Y-LÜM, n. (Bot.) See XANTHOXYLUM. Linnaeus.

ZÄN'TI-ÖT, n. (Geog.) A native, or an inhabitant, of Zante. Earnshaw.

ZÄ'NY [zä'ne, S. W. P. J. E. F. Sm.; zä'ne or zän'ne, Ja.; zän'ne, K.], n. [It. zanni; a contraction of Giovanni, John, according to Ménage, Skinner, and others; but according to Tooke, a contraction of Sanese, a native of Sienna, also used for a fool.] One employed to raise laughter by his gestures, actions, and speeches; a merry-andrew; a buffoon; a clown. He's like the zany to a tumbler.

That tries tricks after him to make men laugh. B. Johnson.
To shine confessed her zany and her tool. Smollett.

+ ZÄ'NY, v. a. To mimic; to imitate. Marston.

ZÄ'NY-ISM, n. The character or practice of a zany, or merry-andrew; buffoonery. Coleridge.

ZÄR'NICH (zär'nik), n. (Min.) A name applied to the native sulphurets of arsenic. Wright.

The common kinds of zarnich are green and yellow. Illis.

ZÄX (zäks), n. A tool for cutting slates. Brande.

Zä'YÄT, n. A Burman caravansary. Malcom.

ZĒ'A, n. [Gr. zēa, zēd, a sort of grain.] (Bot.) A genus of gramineous plants, including maize or Indian corn. Eng. Cyc.

ZĒAL (zē), n. [Gr. zēlos; L. zelus; It. & Sp. zelo; Fr. zèle.] Passionate ardor in some pursuit, or in support of some person or cause; earnestness; warmth; fervency; enthusiasm. Had I but served my God with half the zeal I served my king, he would not, in mine age, Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shak. Pope.

A scorn of flattery and a zeal for truth.

There is nothing to which men more desire themselves than to be zealous, and yet it is a very common error to suppose that it is a necessary condition of being zealous, that one should be a hypocrite. It is not so. Zeal is a noble passion, and it has been for the benefit of mankind if it had never been reckoned in the catalogue of virtues. Spectator.

+ ZĒAL (zē), v. n. To entertain zeal. Bacon.

+ ZĒAL'ANT, n. A zealot; an enthusiast.

To certain zealants all speech of pacification is odious. Bacon.

+ ZĒALED (zēld), a. Filled with, or characterized by, zeal. "Zealed religion." Beau. & Fl.

+ ZĒAL'LESS (zēl'les), a. Wanting zeal. "Zeal-less behavior." Hammond.

ZĒAL'OT [zēl'ut, S. P. J. F. Ja. K. Sm. R.; zēl'ut or zēl'ut, W. Kenrick], n. [Gr. zelōtis; zēlos; zeal; It. zelatore; Sp. zelador; Fr. zéléteur.] One strongly affected or carried away by zeal; an enthusiast; a fanatic; one over zealous; — generally used in dispraise.

For modes of faith let graceless zealots fight;
His can't be wrong whose life is in the right. Pope.

"There are few words better confirmed by authority in their departure from the sound of their simples than this and zealous. Dr. Kennick gives both sounds to both words, but prefers the short sound by placing it first, but Mr. Elphinstone, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Nares, Mr. Smith, Mr. Perry, Barclay, and Entick give both these words the short sound. As the word zealous may either come from the Latin zelus, or rather zelosus, or be a formative of our own from zeal, as villanous, ibellous, &c., from villain, libel, &c., analogy might very allowably be pleaded for the long sound of the diphthong; and, if custom were less decided, I should certainly give my vote for it; but, as propriety of pronunciation may be called a compound ratio of usage and analogy, the short sound must, in this case, be called the proper one." Walker.

+ ZĒA-LÖT'I-CÄL, a. Pertaining to, or like, a zealot; passionately zealous; fanatical. Strype.

ZĒAL'OT-ISM, n. The character or conduct of a zealot; fanaticism; zealotry. Ec. Rev.

† ZĒĀL'QT-ĪST, n. A zealot; an enthusiast.

I could wish these scilicet zealotists had more judgment joined with their zeal. Howell.

ZĒĀL'QT-RY, n. The behavior of a zealot; passion, zeal; fanaticism. [It.] Ep. Taylor.
Inquisitorial cruelty and party zealotry. Coleridge.

[[ZĒĀL'OUS (zē'l'us) [zē'l'us, S. P. J. E. F. Ja. K. Sm. R. C. Wb., zē'l'us or zē'l'us, W. Kenrick], a. [L. zelosus; It. & Sp. zeloso, Fr. zélé.] Possessing zeal; warily engaged in any cause; ardent; fervent; warm; enthusiastic. earnest.

I would have every zealous man examine his heart thoroughly, and I believe he will often find it full of a zeal for his religion is either pride, interest, or in-nature. Spectator.

I love to see a man zealous in a good matter, and especially when his zeal shows itself for advancing morality and promoting the happiness of mankind. Spectator.

Syn. — Zealous in a good or bad cause; a zealous disposition, ardent feeling; fervent love or piety; earnest solicitation, warm heart or friendship; enthusiastic feeling. — See FERVOR.

[[ZĒĀL'OUS-LY, ad. In a zealous manner; ardently; enthusiastically. Milton.

ZĒ'BRA, n. [It. zebra; Sp. cebra; Fr. zébre.] (Zool.) An animal of the ass kind found in the mountainous parts of South Africa, of a white color marked with black bands; Asinus zebra. Baird.

Zebra.

“It is very wild, seeking inaccessible and sequestered spots for its habitation, and living in herds.” Baird.

ZĒ'BRA-WOOD (-wūd), n. A beautiful wood, the product of Omphalobium Lambertii, brought from Guiana, and much used by cabinet-makers; pigeon-wood. Baird. Simmonds.

ZĒ'BU, n. [Fr. (Zool.)] A species of ox found in India; Bos Indicus.

Zebu.

“The zebu is very small, and is remarkable for having long, pendulous ears, and a fatty, elevated hump upon its withers. It is held sacred by the Hindoos, who consider it sinful to kill them.” Baird.

ZĒ'BŪB, n. A very noxious fly, found in Abyssinia, somewhat larger than a bee. Stewart.

ZECHIN (zē'kin or che-kān') [che-kān', W. J. E. F. Ja.; che-kān', S.; zē'kin, P. Sm. Wb. Crabbs; zē'chin, C.], n. [It. zecchino; Fr. sequan.] An Italian gold coin worth about nine shillings sterling.

The directory cost me a zechin. Smollett.

“It is variously written zechin, chequin, and sequin. — See SEQUIN.

ZĒCH'STEIN, n. [Ger. zeche, a mine, and stein, stone.] (Geol.) A name applied to the upper portion of the Permian or Magnesian limestone series in Germany. Lyell.

ZĒD, n. The name of the letter Z; — called also zer, and, provincially, izzard. “Zed, thou unnecessary letter.” Shak.

ZĒD'Q-A-RY (zēd'q-a-rē), n. (Bot.) The common name of two kinds of medicinal roots, the long zedoary, and the round zedoary, the former of which is produced by the Curcuma zedoaria of Roxburgh, the latter, as some suppose, by the Kampferia rotunda of Linnaeus, but according to others, by the Curcuma zernumbet of Roxburgh.

“The roots called zedoary are gravior-white on the outside, yellowish-brown within, hard, compact, of an agreeable aromatic odor, and a bitterish, pungent, camphor taste, and resemble ginger in their qualities.” Wood & Bach.

ZĒĒ, n. A name of the letter Z. G. Brown.

ZĒM-IN-DĀR' [zēm-in-dār', Sm. Brande; zē-mīn'-dār, K. C. Wb.], n. [Hind. zumeen-dar, a landholder; Per. zemīn, land.] A landholder in India, possessing certain rights, especially that of collecting the revenues. Brande.

ZĒM-IN-DĀ-RY, n. The jurisdiction, territory, or possession of a zemindar. P. Cyc.

ZE-NA'NA, n. That part of a house in India particularly reserved for the women. C. P. Brown.

ZĒND, n. The language of the ancient Magi and fire-worshippers of Persia. Hamilton.

The Zend language is of great antiquity, and radically allied to the Sanscrit. Brande.

ZĒND'-A-VĒS'TA, n. [Per., living word.] The sacred books of the Guebers or fire-worshippers in Persia, and the Parsees in India; ascribed to Zoroaster, but of uncertain origin. Brande.

ZĒN'DIK, n. [Arab.] An atheist or infidel. — one charged with magical heresies. Brande.

ZĒ'NIK, n. (Zool.) A species of civet; — called also suricate. — See SURICATE. P. Cyc.

ZĒ'NITH [zē'nith, S. W. P. J. E. F. K. R. Wb.; zē'nith or zē'nith, Ja.; zē'nith, Sm. C. Rees], n. [Arab. — It. zenit; Sp. zenit; Fr. zénith.]

1. (Astron.) The point of the celestial sphere situated vertically over the head of a spectator, and distant ninety degrees from every point of the celestial horizon. Herschel.

Zenith and Nadir, two Arabic terms, imported into Europe with astronomy, to signify the point of the heavens immediately above the spectator, and the opposite (invisible) point below him. P. Cyc.

2. The highest point of a person's fortune.

I never once called in doubt the pronunciation of this word till I was told that mathematicians generally make the first syllable short. Upon consulting our orthoepists, I find all who have the word, and who give the quantity of the vowels, make the a long, except Walker. — See Sheridan, Kenrick, Scott, Buchanan, W. Johnson, and Perry pronounce it long; and, if this majority were not so great and so respectable, the analogy of words of this form ought to decide. Walker.

ZĒ'NITH-DIS-TANCE, n. (Astron.) The distance, in degrees, of a heavenly body from the zenith, being the complement of its altitude. Herschel.

ZĒ'NITH-SĒC'TOR, n. (Astron.) An astronomical instrument consisting in part of a portion of a graduated circle, and adapted for the very exact observation of stars in, or near, the zenith. Herschel.

ZĒ'Q-LITE, n. [Gr. ζέω, to boil, and λίθος, stone.] (Min.) The name of a family of minerals, different from each other in chemical composition and crystalline form, consisting essentially of hydrous silicates of alumina and some alkali or alkaline earth, either soda, potassa, baryta, strontia, or lime, and so called in allusion to their intumescent under the blowpipe; as the pyramidal zeolite, or apophyllite, the feather zeolite, or natrolite, foliated zeolite, or heulandite, radiated zeolite, or stilbite, &c., &c. Dana.

ZĒ-Q-LIT'IC, a. Pertaining to, or containing, zeolite. Ure.

ZĒ-Q-LIT'I-FORM, a. [Eng. zeolite, and L. forma, form.] Having the form of zeolite. Smart.

ZĒPH'YR (zē'fer), n. [Gr. ζέφυρος; ζέφος, darkness, the west; L. zephyrus; It. zefiro; Sp. cefro; Fr. zéphyr.] The west wind; — and, poetically, any mild, soft wind.

Forth rush the levant and the ponent winds, Milton.

ZĒPH'YR-CLŌTH, n. A particular kind of kerseymer. Simmonds.

ZĒPH'YR-SHĀWL, n. A kind of thin shawl, made of worsted and cotton. Simmonds.

ZĒPH'Y-RŪS, n. [L.] The zephyr. Milton.

Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes.

ZĒR'DĀ, n. The fennec. — See FENNEC. Eng. Cyc.

ZĒ'RŌ, n. [It., Sp., & Fr.] The arithmetical cipher; naught; — a term generally applied to the point at which the graduation of the thermometer commences.

“Zero, in common language, means no thing; in arithmetic it is called naught, and means no number; in algebra it stands for no quantity, or for a quantity less than any assignable quantity. Da. & P.

“The zero of Réaumur's and of the centigrade thermometers is the freezing point of water; that of Fahrenheit's thermometer, 32° below the point at which water congeals, being about the temperature of a mixture of salt and snow.” Brande.

ZĒST, n. 1. A piece of orange or lemon peel used to give flavor to liquor. Johnson.

2. That which serves to enhance a pleasure or enjoyment; relish; gusto.

Liberality of disposition and conduct gives the highest zeat and relish to social intercourse. Comyn.

ZĒST, v. a. To give a relish or flavor to. Johnson.

ZĒ'TA, n. 1. A Greek letter [ζ], corresponding to the English z.

2. (Arch.) A small apartment; — applied by some writers to the room over the porch of a Christian church, where the sexton or porter resided, and kept the church documents. Britton.

ZĒ-TĒT'IC, a. [Gr. ζητητικός; ζητέω, to seek.] Proceeding by inquiry; as, “The zetetic method in mathematics.” [R.] Scott.

ZĒ-TĒT'IC, r. A seeker; — a term applied to the ancient Pyrrhonists. Smart.

ZĒ-TĒT'ICS, n. pl. A part of algebra, which consists in the direct search after unknown quantities. [R.] P. Cyc.

ZĒ-TIC'U-LĀ, n. (Arch.) A zeta. Britton.

ZĒUG'LO-DŌN, n. [Gr. ζεύγλον, the bow of a yoke, and δόνος, δόντος, a tooth.] (Pal.) The name of an extinct aquatic mammal, deemed by Owen to be related to the manatee. Its remains occur stratigraphically in the middle eocene strata of Georgia.

The vertebral column of one skeleton extends to the length of nearly seventy feet. When first found, the animal, being supposed to be a reptile, was called basilosaurus. Lyell.

ZĒUG'MĀ (zūg'mā), n. [Gr. ζεύγμα; ζεύγνυμι, to join, to yoke.] (Gram.) A figure by which an adjective or verb which agrees with a nearer word is referred, also, by way of supplement, to one more remote; as, “Lust overcame shame; boldness, fear; and madness, reason.”

ZĒUX'ITE, n. (Min.) [Gr. ζεύξις, connection, because found in the United Mines, Cornwall.] A greenish-brown mineral. Thomson.

ZĒY'LAN-ITE, n. (Min.) A nearly black, opaque crystalline variety of spinel, of splendid lustre, and consisting of alumina, magnesia, protoxide of iron and silica; — called also pléonaste, and ceylanite. — See CEYLANITE. Phillips. Dana.

ZĒŌ (zō), n. A domestic ruminant mammal, common in the Himalayas. Ogilvie.

ZĒB'ET, n. (Zool.) A carnivorous animal, allied to the civet, found in Borneo, Macassar, and some other parts of the east; Viverra zibetha.

Zibet.

The zibet, in common with the Viverra civetta, furnishes the civet of commerce. Van Der Hoeven.

ZĒ'GA, n. Curd produced by the addition of acetic acid to milk, after rennet has ceased to produce coagulation. Brande.

ZĒG'ZĀG, n. 1. A line with sharp turns or angles, as in the letter Z, or one of the turns themselves. “A winding road which forms thirteen zigzags.” Twiss.

2. (Arch.) A chevron running in a zigzag line. Fairholt.

3. pl. (Fort.) Trenches or paths, with several windings, so cut that the besieged are prevented from enfilading the besieger in his approaches. Glos. of Mil. Terms.

ZĒG'ZĀG, a. Having sharp and quick turns. “Zigzag moulding.” Britton.

ZĒG'ZĀG, v. a. [Z. ZIGZAGGED; γγ ZIGZAGGING, ZIGZAGGED.] To form into zigzags, or sharp and quick turns, or angles. Warton.

ZĒG'ZĀGGED (zēg'zāgd), a. Made with sharp turns or angles; zigzag. Pennant.

ZĒL'LĀH, n. A division of country made with reference to judicial purposes. [India.] Smart.

ZĒM'ENT-WĀ'TER, n. Water impregnated with copper. Clarke.

ZĒNC (zīngk. 82), n. [Ger., Dan., & Sw. zink. — Fr. zinc. — “Perhaps formed upon the Ger. zinn, tin.” Richardson. — “First mentioned by Paracelsus, in the 16th century, under the name of zincum. Eng. Cyc. (Min.) A white metal with a shade of blue, capable of being polished, and then assuming a metallic lustre; usually brittle, its fracture exhibiting a crystalline structure; malleable, if pure, into thin leaves at common temperatures; of variable specific gravity, that of cast zinc being about 6.8, but susceptible of being increased by forging to 7.21; melting at 773° Fahrenheit, and, at a red heat, rising in vapor, taking fire in the air, and burning with a white flame like that of phosphorus, the white oxide produced being carried up mechanically in the air.

See Laminated zinc is a valuable substance from its being little disposed to undergo oxidation. When exposed to air or placed in water, its surface becomes covered with a gray film of suboxide, which tends to preserve it from the chemical and mechanical effects of other bodies. In contact with non, it protects the latter metal from oxidation in any saline fluid. Zinc is the only metal which can be used with advantage in the voltaic battery as the positive or generating metal. The principal ores of zinc are calamine and zinc-blende. Graham.

ZINC'-AM-YLE, n. (Chem.) A colorless, transparent liquid, emitting fumes, and rapidly absorbing oxygen when exposed to the air, but not taking fire spontaneously. It is composed of amyle and of zinc. Miller.

ZINC'-RLENDE, n. (Min.) A brittle, transparent or translucent mineral, of lustre resinous to adamantine, of various colors, white or yellow when pure, occurring massive, in crystals, and in other forms, and consisting essentially of sulphur and zinc, but often containing a considerable quantity of iron; — called also blende. Graham. Dana.

ZINC'-BLÔÔM, n. (Min.) An opaque mineral, of a white, grayish, or yellowish color, dull lustre, occurring in earthy incrustations and reniform, and consisting of carbonic acid, oxide of zinc, and water; — called also dicarbonate of zinc. Dana.

ZINC'-ËTH-YL, n. (Chem.) A colorless, transparent, poisonous liquid, not congealable by a cold of —8° Fahrenheit, boiling at 244°, of a powerful odor, taking fire by contact with oxygen or with atmospheric air, and consisting of ethyl (a compound of four equivalents of carbon and five of hydrogen) and zinc.

See Zinc-ethyl burns with a brilliant blue flame fringed with green. If a cold piece of glass, or of porcelain, be held in the flame, it becomes coated with a deposit of metallic zinc, surrounded with a white ring of the oxide of this metal. Miller.

ZIN-CIF'ER-OÛS, a. [Eng. zinc, and L. fero, to bear.] Producing, or containing, zinc. P. Cyc.

ZINC'ITE, n. (Min.) A brittle, translucent or subtranslucent mineral, of a deep-red color, inclining also to yellow, adamantine lustre, and consisting of oxide of zinc, with oxide of manganese as an unessential ingredient; — called also red zinc ore, and red oxide of zinc. Dana.

ZINCK'Y, a. Pertaining to zinc. Smart.

ZINC-METH'YL, n. (Chem.) A volatile liquid, of very fetid smell, the vapors of which are very poisonous, and consisting of two equivalents of carbon, three of hydrogen, and one of zinc; — written also zincomethyl. Gregory.

See Zincomethyl takes fire spontaneously on contact with the air, and burns with a bright, greenish-blue flame, depositing a large quantity of zinc and oxide of zinc. It is apparently a new radical. Gregory.

ZIN-CÖG'RA-PHER, n. One who engraves on plates of zinc. Chabot.

ZIN-CÖ-GRÄPH'IC, } a. Pertaining to zin-ZIN-CÖ-GRÄPH'IC-AL, } cography. Wright.

ZIN-CÖG'RA-PHY, n. [Eng. zinc, and Gr. γράφω, to write.] The art of drawing upon, and printing from, plates of zinc. Fairholt.

ZINC'ÖID, n. [Eng. zinc, and Gr. εἶδος, form.] (Chem.) The platinum plate of the decomposing cell connected with the terminal copper or conducting plate of a voltaic battery, the other platinum plate of the decomposing cell being connected with the zinc or generating plate, and called the chloroid; the positive electrode; the positive pole. Graham.

ZINC-Q-METH'YL, n. See ZINC-METHYL.

ZINC'OÛS, a. (Chem.) Having the affinity or attraction characteristic of the zinc or generating metal of the voltaic battery, as the zincous plate, or zincoid, of the decomposing cell; — used in contradistinction to chlorous, noting the affinity or attraction characteristic of the platinum or conducting plate of a voltaic battery. Graham.

ZINC'-VIT-RI-OL, n. (Min.) White vitriol; sulphate of zinc. — See VITRIOL.

ZINC'-WHITE, n. The oxide of zinc used as a pigment. Fairholt.

ZINK'EN-ITE, n. (Min.) An opaque, crystalline mineral, of metallic lustre, steel-gray color and streak, and consisting chiefly of sulphur, antimony, and lead; — named in honor of Zinken, director of the Anhalt mines. Dana.

ZI'ON, n. A mount or eminence in Jerusalem: — used figuratively for the church. Bp. Horne.
Let Zion and her sons rejoice. Watts.

ZIR'CON, n. (Min.) A crystalline mineral, transparent to subtranslucent, of various colors, adamantine lustre, and consisting of silica and zirconia. It comprises three varieties, — hyacinth, jargon, and zirconite. Dana.

ZIR-CÖ'NI-A, n. A white, infusible powder, consisting of an oxide of zirconium, commonly regarded as the sesquioxide, having the specific gravity of 4.3, and, after ignition, insoluble in acids, with the exception of strong sulphuric acid. Miller.

See Svanberg infers from his experiments that zirconia is not a pure earth, but a mixture of three earths. Miller.

ZIR'CON-ITE, n. (Min.) A grayish or brownish, frequently rough or opaque, variety of zircon. Dana.

ZIR-CÖ'NI-ÛM, n. (Chem.) The metallic base of zirconia, an earth which is contained in zircon. It is obtained in the form of a black powder. The powder assumes under the burnisher the lustre of iron, and is compressed in scales which resemble graphite.

See Zirconium has not been fused. When heated in air or oxygen, it takes fire below redness, and burns brilliantly, forming zirconia of snowy whiteness. Graham. Miller.

ZI'S'EL, n. (Zool.) A species of marmot. Smellie.

ZI-ZÄ'NI-Ä, n. pl. [L.] (Bot.) A genus of plants, including the wild rice. Eng. Cyc.

ZÖ-AN'THA, n. (Zool.) A genus of many-armed polypi which do not secrete a stony stem, and develop the polypes in lines from creeping shoots. Dana.

ZÖ-AN-THÄ'RI-A, n. pl. [Gr. ζῶν, an animal, and ἄνθος, a flower.] (Zool.) A name given by Blainville to a class of polypi, including the sea-anemones, and all corals excepting the Alcyonaria.

ZÖ'CÖ, n. (Arch.) A socle or zoele. Clarke.

ZÖC'Q-LÖ, n. [It.] (Arch.) A socle. Brande.

ZÖ'CLE, n. (Arch.) A low, plain, square member or plinth supporting a column; a socle. Britton.

ZÖ'DI-ÄÖ [zö'de-äk, P. J. F. Ja. K. Sm. C.; zö'dzhék, S.; zö'de-äk or zö'de-äk, W. Cobbin, n.] [Gr. ζῳδιακός; ζῶν, an animal; L. zodiacus; It. & Sp. zodiaco; Fr. zodiaque.]

1. (Astron.) An imaginary zone or belt in the heavens, within which the sun and all the larger planets appear to perform their annual revolutions. It extends about eight or nine degrees on each side of the ecliptic; contains twelve constellations, and is divided into twelve equal parts, called signs, which anciently coincided with the constellations, but now occupy very different positions.

2. A girdle; a belt; a girth; zone. Milton.

ZÖ-DI'A-CAL, a. [It. zodiacale; Sp. & Fr. zodiacal.] Pertaining to the zodiac. Warton.

Zodiacal light, (Astron.) a faint, ill-defined light, visible any very clear evening, about the months of March, April, and May, soon after sunset, as a cone or lenticularly shaped light, extending from the horizon obliquely upwards, and following generally the course of the ecliptic, or rather that of the sun's equator. Herschel.

ZÖ'HÄR, n. [Heb., splendor.] A Jewish book consisting of cabalistical commentaries on Scripture, especially the books of Moses. It is of ancient but uncertain origin. Brande.

ZÖ-IL'F-AN, a. Pertaining to, or resembling; Zoilus, a severe critic on Homer; illiberal; unjustly severe. Richardson.

ZÖ'IL-ÏSM, n. Illiberal or carping criticism, like that of Zoilus; unjust censure.

Bring candid eyes to the notice of man's works, and let not zoilism . . . thy name be known. Byron.

ZÖIS'ITE, n. (Min.) A crystalline mineral, of various colors, vitreous lustre, and consisting of silica, alumina, sesquioxide of iron, and lime. Dana.

ZÖLL'VER-EIN, n. [Ger.] A commercial league formed in Germany for the purpose of establishing a uniform rate of customs. It includes Prussia, Bavaria, Baden, Wurtemberg, Saxony, Hanover, and most of the smaller states. Thomas.

ZÖ'NÄR, n. A girdle which the Christians and Jews of the Levant are obliged to wear to distinguish them from Mahometans. Smart.

ZÖNE, n. [Gr. ζώνη; ζώννμι, to gird; L. It., & Sp. zona; Fr. zone.]

1. A girdle; a belt; a cincture. [Poetical.]

Scenes and the goddesses from her breasts be known. Pope.

2. (Geog.) The geographical denomination of each of the five parallel belts into which the earth is imagined to be divided, chiefly in respect to temperature. Hutton.

See There are five zones — the torrid zone, extending 23° 28' on each side of the equator, and between the tropics; two temperate zones, situated between the tropics and polar circles; and two frigid zones, situated between the polar circles and the poles.

3. (Math.) The portion of the surface of a sphere included between two parallel planes. Davies & Peck.

4. Circuit; circumference.

Had finished half his journey, and scarce begins His other half in the great zone of heaven. Milton.

Ciliary zone, (Anat.) an external lamina sent off from the capsule of the vitreous humor of the eye, and accompanying the retina, with which it is inserted into the fore part of the capsule of the lens, a little before its anterior edge. Dunglison.

Syn. — Zones of the earth; temperate zone, a vestal zone; a monk's or a lady's girdle; a military officer's belt.

ZÖNED (zönd), a. Wearing a zone or zones. Pope.

ZÖNE'LESS, a. Destitute of a zone or girdle.

Thou art not known where Pleasure is adored, That reeling goddess with the zoneless wrist. Cowper.

ZÖ'NIC, n. A girdle; a belt; a zone. [R.]

I know that the place where I was bred stands upon a zone of coal. Smollett.

ZÖN'NÄR, n. See ZONAR. Clarke.

ZÖ'NÛLE, n. A little zone. Ogilvie.

ZÖ-Q-ÖHËM'I-CAL, a. Pertaining to animal chemistry. Dunglison.

ZÖ-ÖSH'F-MY, n. [Gr. ζῶν, an animal, and Eng. chemistry.] Animal chemistry. Dunglison.

ZÖ-ÖG'F-NY, n. [Gr. ζῶν, an animal, and γενεσις, generation.] The doctrine of animal formation. Dunglison.

ZÖ-ÖG'RA-PHER, n. One versed in zoögraphy.

ZÖ-Q-GRÄPH'IC, } a. Pertaining to zoögra-ZÖ-Q-GRÄPH'IC-AL, } phy or zoölogy. Maunder.

ZÖ-ÖG'RA-PHIST, n. A zoögrapher. Asb.

ZÖ-ÖG'RA-PHY, n. [Gr. ζῶν, an animal, and γραφω, to write; It. & Sp. zoografía; Fr. zoographe.] A description of animals; the natural history of animals. Glanville.

ZÖ-ÖL'A-TRY, n. [Gr. ζῶν, an animal, and λατρεῖω, to work for hire, to serve the gods with prayer and sacrifices; It. zoolatria; Fr. zoolâtrie.] The worship of animals, as in the religion of the ancient Egyptians. Brande.

ZÖ'Q-LITE, n. [Gr. ζῶν, an animal, and λίθος, a stone.] A petrified animal substance. Lyell.

ZÖ-ÖL'Q-GER, n. A zoölogist. [R.] Boyle.

ZÖ-Q-LÖG'I-CAL, a. [It. & Sp. zoologico; Fr. zoologique.] Pertaining to zoölogy or to animals

ZÖ-Q-LÖG'I-CAL-LY, ad. In a zoölogical manner; according to zoölogy. P. Cyc.

ZQ-ÖL'Q-GIST, n. [It. zoologista; Fr. zoologiste.] One who is versed in zoölogy, or the natural history of animals. Baird.

ZQ-ÖL'Q-GY, n. [Gr. ζῷον, an animal, and λόγος, a discourse; It. & Sp. zoologia; Fr. zoologie.] That branch of natural history which investigates and teaches the nature and properties of animals, their classification, their order of succession upon, and their distribution over, the earth. Baird.

ZÖ-Q-MÖR'PHISM, n. [Gr. ζῷον, an animal, and μορφή, shape.] The transformation of men into beasts. Smart.

ZQ-ÖN'Q-MY, n. [Gr. ζῷον, an animal, and νόμος, a law; Sp. zoonomia; Fr. zoonomie.] That branch of science treating of laws which govern the organic actions of animals in general; animal physiology. Oswald.

ZQ-ÖPH'Ä-GÄN, n. A carnivorous animal. Clarke.

ZQ-ÖPH'Ä-GÖÜS, n. [Gr. ζωοφάγος; ζῷον, an animal, and φάγω, to eat.] Feeding on animals; carnivorous. Kirby.

ZÖ-Q-PHÖR'IC [zö-q-for'ik, W. P. J. E. Ja. K. Sm.; zö-ör'q-rik, C. Wb. Ash], a. [Arch.] Applied to a column which supports the figure of an animal. Bailey.

ZQ-ÖPH'Q-RÜS, n. [Gr. ζωοφόρος; ζῷον, an animal, and φέρω, to bear; L. zoophorus.] (Arch.) In classic architecture, a frieze;—so called because it was generally adorned with the figures of animals. Fairholt.

ZÖ'Q-PHYTE (zö'q-fit), n. [Gr. ζῷον, an animal, and φυτόν, a plant; It. & Sp. zoofito; Fr. zoophyte.] A name commonly given to the radiated and phytoid forms of life included by Linnæus in his great division of vermes. Under this title, Cuvier ranked the intestinal worms, and most writers sponges and corallines. Eng. Cyc.

At the present day the term is confined to true polypes, such as Actinias, Corals, Gorgonias, and the like. Agassiz.

ZÖ-Q-PHYT'I-CAL, } P. Cyc.

ZÖ-Q-PHYT-Q-LÖG'I-CAL, a. Pertaining to zoöphytology. Clarke.

ZQ-ÖPH-Y-TÖL'Q-GY, n. [Gr. ζῷον, an animal, φυτόν, a plant, and λόγος, a discourse; Fr. zoophytologie.] That branch of science which treats of the structure, habits, &c., of zoöphytes. Humble.

ZÖ'Q-SPERM, n. One of the spermatozoa of an animal. Dunglison.

ZÖ'Q-SPÖRE, n. [Gr. ζῷον, an animal, and σπορά, a sowing, seed.] An active ciliated gemma produced from the contents of an ordinary or special cell of the algæ, apparently without any previous process of fertilization. Mic. Diet.

ZÖ-Q-TÖM'I-CAL, a. Pertaining to zootomy, or the structure of the lower animals. Month. Rev.

ZQ-ÖT'Q-MIST, n. [Fr. zootomiste.] One versed in zootomy. Johnson.

ZQ-ÖT'Q-MY, n. [Gr. ζῷον, an animal, and τέμνω, to cut; It. & Sp. zootomia; Fr. zootomie.] That branch of anatomy which relates to the structure of the lower animals. Brande.

ZÖÖ'ZÖÖ, n. The wood-pigeon. [Local, Eng.] Wright.

ZQ-PÏS'SÄ, n. [Gr. ζῶπια; ζῶος, living, and πίσσα, pitch; L. zopissa.] (Naut.) A sort of pitch scraped off from the sides of ships, and tempered with wax and salt. Mar. Dict.

ZÖS'TER, n. [Gr. ζωστήρ, a girdle; L. zoster, the shingles.] (Med.) A kind of tetter; the shingles. Dunglison.

ZÖS'TE-RA, n. [Gr. ζωστήρ, a girdle.] (Bot.) A genus of monocotyledonous plants with grassy leaves, growing in sea-water; grass-wrack; eel-grass. Their pollen consists of delicate threads instead of grains. Gray.

ZÖU-ÄVE', n. Originally, a member of a corps of Arab soldiers, in the service of France after the conquest of Algiers, — now, a member of a corps wearing the Arab dress. Bescherville.

ZÖÜNDZ, interj. A contraction of God's wounds; originally used as an oath, and afterwards as an exclamation of wonder or anger. Smart.

ZÖÜTCH, v. a. To stew, as flounders, whittings, gudgeons, eels, &c., with just enough of liquid to cover them. [Local.] Smart.

+ZUCHE, n. (Old Eng. Law.) A withered or dry stock or stub of a tree. Burriil.

ZÖ'FO-LÖ, n. [It., from zufolare, to whistle.] (Mus.) Any little flute or flageolet, but more especially that which is used to teach birds. Moore.

ZUM-BÖÖ'RUK, n. A small swivel-gun, carried on the back of a camel. Glos. of Mil. Terms.

ZÜ'MIC, a. [Gr. ζύμν, leaven.] (Chem.) Noting an acid formerly supposed to be a distinct compound, but now known to be identical with lactic acid. Henry.

ZÜ-MÖL'Q-GY, n. See ZYMOLOGY. Brande.

ZÜ-MÖM'E-TER, n. [Gr. ζύμν, ferment, and μέτρον, a measure.] A zymometer. — See ZY-MOMETER. Hoblyn.

ZÜ-MQ-SIM'E-TER, n. Zymosimeter. Brande.

ZÜR'LITE, n. (Min.) A transparent, translucent, or opaque crystalline mineral, of various colors, vitreous lustre, and consisting chiefly of silica, alumina, oxide of iron, and lime; — called also mellitite, and somervillite. Dana.

ZY'GA-DITE, n. (Min.) A feebly transparent, red and yellowish-white mineral, occurring in thin, tabular, rhombic prisms, and consisting of silica, alumina, and lithia. Dana.

ZY-GQ-DÄC'TY-LIC, a. Zygodactylous. Clarke.

ZY-GQ-DÄC'TY-LOÜS, a. [Gr. ζυγώω, to join, and δάκτυλος, a finger.] Having the feet composed of two anterior and two posterior toes, the external toe of the posterior pair being capable of a direction either forward or backward, as in the parrot, woodpecker, toucan, &c. Ed. Ency.

ZY-GÖ'MÄ, n. [Gr. ζυγωμα; ζύγον, a yoke.] (Anat.) The cheek-bone; — so called from its shape, which is irregularly quadrilateral with a convex outer surface. Gray.

ZY-GQ-MÄT'IC, a. [Fr. zygomatique.] Pertaining to the zygomata or cheek-bone. Dunglison.

Zygomata arch. (Anat.) A bony hidge formed by the articulation of the zygomatic process with the posterior angle of the zygomata. — Zygomata bone, the zygomata, or cheek-bone. — Zygomata muscles, two muscles, arising from the outer surface of the zygomata, and inserted into the upper lip, which they raise and draw up. — Zygomata process, a process arising from the outer surface of the temporal bone, and articulating with the zygomata. — Zygomata suture, the suture or articulation between the zygomatic parts of the temporal and cheek bones. Dunglison.

ZY-MQ-LÖG'IC, } a. [Fr. zymologique.] Re-

ZY-MQ-LÖG'I-CAL, } lating to zymology. Oswald.

ZY-MÖL'Q-GIST, n. [Fr. zymologiste.] One versed in zymology. Oswald.

ZY-MÖL'Q-GY, n. [Gr. ζύμν, ferment, and λόγος, a discourse; Fr. zymologie.] The doctrine of fermentation, or a treatise on the fermentation of liquors; — written also zymology. Oswald.

Zymology, zymological, zymologist, zymometer, &c., are sometimes spelt with u and sometimes with y, in the first syllable, as zumology, zumology, &c. But the use of y instead of u in these words, is in accordance with the general rule of orthography, in transferring words of this class from Greek into English.

ZY-MÖM'E-TER, n. [Gr. ζύμν, ferment, and μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument for measuring the degree to which fermentation has proceeded in fermenting liquors; a zymosimeter. Simmonds.

ZY-MQ-SIM'E-TER, n. [Gr. ζύμν, fermentation, and μέτρον, a measure.] A zymometer; zumometer. Crabb.

ZY-MÖ'SIS, n. [Gr. ζύμν, fermentation.] (Med.) An epidemic, endemic, or contagious affection. Dunglison.

ZY-MÖT'IC, a. [Gr. ζυμωτικός, causing to ferment; ζύμω, to cause to ferment.] (Med.) Noting, or pertaining to, an epidemic, an endemic, or a contagious affection; infectious. Dunglison.

All infectious diseases are zymotic disorders. Dr. Mann.

Syn. — See CONTAGIOUS.

ZY-THËP'SA-RY, n. [Gr. ζυθος, zythum, and ἐψω, to boil.] A brewery; a brew-house. Wright.

ZY'THUM, n. [Gr. ζυθος; L. zythum.] A kind of malt liquor. Ainsworth.

Ä, Ê, Ì, Ò, Û, Ȳ, long; Å, Ë, Î, Ô, ȳ, short; Ä, Ê, Ì, Ö, Ȳ, obscure; FÄRE, FÄR, FÄST, FÄLL; HËIR, HËR.

P R E F A C E.

"A KEY to the Classical Pronunciation of Greek, Latin, and Scripture Proper Names," by John Walker, was first published in 1798. It has ever since been regarded as a standard work, and has passed through many editions. An edition of this "Key," by the Rev. W. Trollope, with an explanation of the Proper Names, Critical Notes, and between five and six hundred additional words, was published in 1833.

The "Nomenclator Poeticus, or the Quantities of all the Proper Names that occur in the Latin Classic Poets from B. C. 190 to A. D. 500, including examples of every species of metre used by them," by Lancelot Sharpe, was published in 1836. In 1842 appeared "The Classical Pronunciation of Proper Names, established by Citations from the Greek and Latin Poets, Greek Historians, Geographers, and Scholiasts, and including a Terminational Synopsis of Analogy, Etymology, &c., with an Appendix of Scripture Proper Names carefully accented," by Thomas Swinburne Carr.

In the Appendix to the "Universal and Critical Dictionary," published in 1846, Walker's "Key" was inserted entire, together with about 3,000 additional Greek and Latin Proper Names, the most of which were taken from Carr and Trollope; and in the Appendix to the "Pronouncing, Explanatory, and Synonymous Dictionary," published in 1855, about 1,500 names, taken from Sharpe's "Nomenclator Poeticus," were added to the Vocabulary of Greek and Latin Proper Names, making the whole addition to Walker's list about 4,500 names. The pronunciation of a considerable number of these names, which had been shown by citations from the Greek and Latin poets, as exhibited by Sharpe, Carr, and other prosodists, to be erroneous, was corrected.

The Vocabulary of the Greek and Latin Proper Names, and also that of the Scripture Proper Names, as here given, have been revised, with great labor and care, by Mr. Ezra Abbot, A. M. Such Greek and Latin names as were unnecessarily inserted in a pronouncing vocabulary have been omitted; many others have been added, numerous errors corrected; and both of these vocabularies will, it is believed, be found far more correct than any before published.

The following Vocabularies of Greek and Latin Proper Names are founded on those given in Walker's "Key"; but the changes which have been made in the INITIAL VOCABULARY are so extensive as to constitute it, in a great measure, a new work. The Initial Vocabulary in Walker's Key contains about 10,480 names. Of these about 2,200 have been rejected as useless, or as mere typographical errors; in about 500 his pronunciation has been corrected, not including the numerous instances in which trivial mistakes have been removed, such as those which relate merely to the division into syllables; and about 6,580 names have been added to the number contained in Walker.

Of the words which have been rejected, a large majority have no claim to a place in a pronouncing vocabulary, for the simple reason that their pronunciation cannot be mistaken. Who would look in a dictionary for the pronunciation of such words as Abantis, Abas, Acanthus, Acmon, Actis, and the like? A few words have been omitted because they are found only once, so far as is known, in the whole circle of classical literature, and there is nothing to determine their accent; as, Apusidamus, which occurs, apparently, only in a single passage of Pliny. The typographical errors to which allusion has been made are very numerous. Many of these seem to have been copied by Walker from Lempriere; as, Æchmacoras for Æchmago-ras; Ædon for Ædon; Amphitea for Amphithea; Ampysides for Ampycides; Androtion for Androtion; Apsinus for Apsines; Belistida for Belistiche; Calagutis for Calaguris; Costobæi for Costoboci; Conisaltus for Conisalus; Galeolæ for Galeotæ, &c. It may give a better idea of the nature of the omissions in the present edition to state the fact that, of the words in Walker's Vocabulary beginning with the letter A, 256 have been rejected; 185 because their pronunciation could not be mistaken, 62 as corrupt forms or misprints, and 9 for other reasons.

The corrections of Walker's pronunciation, relating chiefly to the accent, have been founded on a careful examination of the best authorities. Among these authorities, the works of Carr and Sharpe are particularly valuable for their citations from the Latin poets; and in the case of Greek proper names, the Lexicons of Crusius and Pape, and Rost and Palm's new edition of Passow, have been of great service. Besides the 500 instances mentioned above, in which Walker's pronunciation has been altered as erroneous, there are about 150 more in which it is given as doubtful. Some of these are names in which the quantity of the penultimate syllable varies in the poets; as, Bata'vi or Bat'avi; in respect to others, lexicographers and prosodists differ, as Gen'abum or Gena'bum; and there are others still, which are variously pronounced according to their application, as Æne'as, Virgil's hero; Æ'neas (Alvéas), the name of several persons mentioned by Xenophon, Thucydides, and other ancient authors; Or'pheus, used as a noun; Orphe'us, as an adjective. In many cases in which the true accent of a word is doubtful, the conflicting authorities have been designated.

The additions have been derived from various sources, of which the most important are the works of Carr and Sharpe, Pauly's Real-Encyclopädie, and the Classical Dictionaries edited by Dr. William Smith. Some mediæval names have been inserted, particularly such as are used as Christian names; as, Carolus, Fridericus, Galfridus, Henricus, Ludovicus.

It has hitherto been customary, in representing Greek proper names in our language, to adopt their Latinized forms. Some distinguished English scholars, as Mr. Grote, in his "History of Greece," have recently introduced a different system, which aims to represent the Greek more accurately. They accordingly write Alkibiades for Alcibiades, Peisistratus for Pisistratus, &c. It has not, however, been thought necessary or expedient to swell the present Vocabulary by the insertion of these forms.

The course which has been taken with the TERMINATIONAL VOCABULARY is explained in the Preface to that part of this work.

PRONUNCIATION

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

REMARKS.

THE following rules and observations relating to the pronunciation of Greek and Latin Proper Names are in general accordance with the principles of Walker; but as the system of notation used in this Dictionary is applied to these Names in the Vocabulary, and as all the words are divided into syllables, some of his rules for their pronunciation are here omitted as unnecessary.

1. Greek and Latin names introduced into modern languages naturally acquire, in sound and rhythm, the main characteristics of the different languages which receive them. That which is chiefly attended to and sought after, in classical names, is the seat of the accent; and when the seat of the accent and the syllabication are determined, these names are pronounced, in the English language, according to the powers of the letters in common English words.

2. In Greek and Latin names, the accent is always placed on either the second or the third syllable from the end of the word. In words of more than two syllables, if the penult is long in quantity, it is accented; if short, the antepenult receives the accent.

3. The vowel of the penult before x, z, j, or any two consonants except a mute followed by a liquid, as l or r, is long by position. In other cases its quantity must be determined by poetic usage, etymology, or the mode in which the word is written in Greek. The digraphs ch, ph, rh, and th are to be regarded as single consonants.

4. An accented vowel in the penultimate syllable, when followed by a single consonant, by j or z, or by a mute with l or r, has the long sound; as, A'bas, A'cra; otherwise, it is short; as, Abāntis. This pronunciation, in cases like the first and last of these examples, is so obvious, that it has not been deemed necessary to include such words in the Vocabulary.

Exception. — Before gl and tl, the vowel of the penult, unless it be u, has the short sound; as, Ægle (ëg'le), Atlas (ăt'las).

5. The final e is always sounded; as in Bereni'ce. This remark, of course, does not apply to Anglicized forms; as, Pros'er-pine, for Proserpina.

6. Every final i, though unaccented, has its long open sound, as in Abolani. But when i, or its equivalent y, ends an unaccented first syllable of a word, it has, in some cases, its long sound, as in Bianor; in some, it takes the indistinct sound of e, as in Cilicia; and in some it is difficult to determine which of these sounds is to be preferred, as there is a want of agreement with respect to them both among orthoepists and good speakers.

7. The termination es is pronounced like the English word ease; as, Achilles (a-kil'lēz).

8. The terminations aus and ous are always pronounced in two syllables; as, Men-e-la'us, An-tin'o-us.

9. The termination eus in proper names which in Greek end in εύς, as Orpheus, Prometheus, is to be pronounced as one syllable, the eu being a diphthong. Walker, following Labbe, generally separates the vowels in pronunciation. But the diphthong is never resolved in Greek; and very rarely, if ever, in Latin poetry of the golden or the silver age, the few examples which have been adduced being, with perhaps a single exception, either corrupt readings, or taken from writings of doubtful genuineness (as the Culex ascribed to Virgil), or wholly irrelevant, as in the case of the word Tyndareus, cited by Labbe and others.* The usage of the English poets, of modern classical scholars, and of the best speakers generally, also favors, it is believed, the pronunciation which the analogy of the original languages requires, and which is supported by the authority of the best Latin grammarians from Priscian (De Arte Gram., Lib. VII. c. 4) to the present time.

10. There is a class of proper names ending in ia, which, in their classical pronunciation, have the accent on the penultimate; as, Alexandri'a, Cassandri'a, Deidami'a, Philadelph'i'a, Samar'i'a, &c. The English analogy strongly favors the antepenultimate accent in the pronunciation of this class of words; and Walker countenances this accent in relation to a part of them, especially such as are much used in English, and have consequently become, in a measure, Anglicized. The following words, namely, Alexandria, Philadelphia, and Samaria, are so much Anglicized, that it would seem pedantic, in reading or speaking English, to pronounce them otherwise than with the antepenultimate accent. But such of these names as are scarcely at all Anglicized, as Antiochia, Deidamia, Laomedea, &c., may very properly be allowed to retain their classical accentuation.

11. There are some other classical names which have become more or less Anglicized, and which have, in consequence, had their pronunciation in a greater or less degree changed from the classical standard. Thus, Arius, the name of the celebrated heretic, is pronounced A'rius in English, though the penult is long in Greek; and the usage of the English poets has substituted Hyperion for Hyperion.

* Walker erroneously represents Labbe as observing that "the Latin poets very frequently dissolved the diphthong into two syllables." Labbe, on the contrary, admits that the ancient Latin poets "almost always" — ferè semper — preserve the diphthong.

RULES OF PRONUNCIATION

REFERRED TO BY FIGURES IN THE FOLLOWING VOCABULARY.

RULE 1. — The consonants c, s, and t, immediately preceded by the accent, and standing before i, followed by another vowel, commonly have the sound of sh; as in Pho'cion (fō'she-ōn), Ac'cius (āk'she-ūs), Al'sium (āl'she-ūm), Helve'tii (hel-vē'she-ī). — C, following an accented syllable, has also the same sound before eu and yo, as in Cadu'ceus (ka-dū'she-ūs), Si'cyon (sīsh'e-ōn).

Exceptions. — T, when preceded by s or x, has its hard sound, as in Sestius, Sextius. — When si or zi, immediately preceded by an accented vowel, is followed by a vowel, the s or z generally takes the sound of zh; as, Mæ'sia (mē'zhe-a), Hē'siod (hē'zhe-ōd), Ely'sium (e-līzh'e-ūm), Sabazius (sa-bā'zhe-ūs). According to Walker, the words Asia, Sosia, and Theodosia are the only exceptions; but to these a few others should perhaps be added, as Lysias, Tysias.

X, ending an accented syllable, and standing before i followed by a vowel, has the sound of ksh; as in Alex'ia (a-lēk'she-a).

RULE 2. — In some proper names, t preserves its true sound; as, Aëtion, Amphictyon, Androtion, Eurytion, Gratton, Harpocraton, Hippotion, Iphition, Metion, Ornytion, Pallantion, Philistion, Polytion, Sotion, Stratton, and a few others; but Hephæstion and Theodotion are Anglicized, the last syllable being pronounced like the last syllable in question, commotion. In the words Æsion, Dionysion, and Iasion, the s takes the sound of z, but not of zh.

RULE 3. — In words ending in eia, eii, eium, and eius, with the accent on the e, the i following the accent is to be understood as articulating the following vowel like y consonant; as, Elege'ia (el-e-jē'ya), Pompe'ii (pom-pē'yi), Pompe'ium (pom-pē'yum), Pompe'ius (pom-pē'yus). The same rule also applies to words ending in ia, preceded by a or o having the accent upon it, as Acha'ia (a-kā'ya), Lato'ia (la-tō'ya), and likewise to words having the accent on a vowel, followed by ia, even when these letters do not end the word, as Plē'iades (plē'ya-dēz).

The letters yi, followed by a vowel, generally represent the Greek diphthong ui, and form but one syllable; as, Harpyia, pronounced Har-py'ya, or, as some prefer, Har-pwī'a; Ilithyia, pronounced in four syllables, Il-i-thy'ya, not I-lith-y-i'a, as in Walker.

RULE 4. — The diphthongs æ and œ, ending a syllable with the accent on it, are pronounced like long e, as in Cæ'sar (sē'zar); but when followed by a consonant in the same syllable, like short e, as in Dæd'alus (dēd'a-lūs).

RULE 5. — In Greek and Latin words which begin with uncombinable consonants, the first letter is silent; thus, C in Cneus and Ctesiphon, M in Mneus, P in Psyche and Ptolemy, Ph in Phibia, and T in Tmolus, are not sounded.

RULE 6. — The termination eus in most Greek proper names corresponds to εύς, and is then to be pronounced in one syllable; as, Orpheus, pronounced Or'phūse.

(1705)

† Antigenides. — The penult is made long by Anaxandrides (in Athen. Lib. IV. p. 131, b.), and by Leonidas of Tarentum (Brunck's Anal. I. 220). The word, however, is usually written in Greek Ἀντιγευσίδας, not Ἀντιγευσίδας.

[illegible]

* Augus'tine or Augus'tin. — As a Christian name, the second syllable is generally accented; but Longfellow, apostrophizing the Bishop of Hippo, places the accent on the first or third: —

"Saint Augustine! well hast thou said,
That of our vices we can frame
A ladder, if we will but tread
Beneath our feet each deed of shame!"

So Drayton, Polyolbion, stanza 24. Later English poets accent the second syllable, as Wordsworth, Praed, Cary, and Wright in their translations of Dante, &c.

† Bel'lerus. — Walker accents this word on the penultimate, following the supposed authority of Milton, in his Lycidas (l. 160) : —

" Or whether thou, to our moist vows denied, Sleep'st by the fable of Bellerus old."

But the Bellerus here referred to by Milton is not the Bellerus of classical mythology.
— See Warton's note.

† Briareus. — The forms Βριάρεως and Βριάρεϋς both occur in Greek; and in English the word is often a trisyllable.

* Cleom'enes. — Dryden, throughout his tragedy of Cleomenes, incorrectly accents this word on the penultimate.

to be short by nature, the Latin poets, as Lucan, Juvenal, and Statius, often make it long by position; and the usage of Shakespeare has fixed the accent on this syllable for English readers.

* Dia'na. — "The usual pronunciation is Di-an'a," — SMART.

* Eu'menes. — "Our old writers [as Hughes and Lee], who accent classical names as their English ears incline them, pronounce thir word Eu-me'nes." — SMART.

[illegible]

* Granicus.—"As Alexander's passing the River Granicus is a common subject of history poetry, and painting, it is not wonderful that the common ear should have given in to a pronunciation of this word more agreeable to English analogy than the true classical accent on the penultimate syllable. The accent on the first syllable is now so fixed as to make the other pronunciation savor of pedantry."—WALKER. * That is, if correct speaking be pedantry."—TROLLOPE. It is to be hoped that the vicious pronunciation, which Walker regarded as fixed, has now become less prevalent. Smart accents the word on the second syllable.

† Herac'l'itus.—The name of Democ'ritus, the laughing philosopher, being often mentioned in connection with that of Herac'l'itus, the weeping philosopher, there is a tendency to accent the latter, incorrectly, on the second syllable.

[illegible]

* Parys'atis, or Parysa'tis. — Lee, in his tragedy of Alexander the Great, accents the penultimate syllable.

† Pha'ethon. — This word has been vulgarly corrupted into Phaeton (perhaps through the influence of Lempriere), and, still worse, into Phaton.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

* Serapis.—The penultimate syllable is made short by Latin poets of the brazen or iron age, as Martianus Capella and Prudentius. So by Milton, Par. Lost, l. 720.

[illegible]

[illegible]

* Typho'eus. — This word is very often incorrectly written Typhaeus, and pronounced accordingly. The Greek is Τυφώεϋς.

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

TERMINATIONAL VOCABULARY.

P R E F A C E .

THE following Terminational Vocabulary of Greek and Latin Proper Names is in the main that of Walker, but with many corrections and considerable additions. There is such a want of correspondence between the contents of Walker's Terminational Vocabulary and those of his Initial Vocabulary, that they seem to have been derived from different sources. Each embraces a large number of words not to be found in the other; the Terminational Vocabulary containing, in particular, many names belonging to the Latin of the middle ages, which are not included in the Initial Vocabulary. For example, of the sixteen words which Walker gives in his Terminational Vocabulary under the ending ba, only six are found in his Initial Vocabulary; and an equal want of correspondence appears under many other terminations. There are also, as has already been remarked (p. 1705), numerous discrepancies in the accentuation of the words which are common to both; and, strange as it may seem, in not a few instances the Terminational Vocabulary contradicts itself. Thus, under the termination ides, the words Lyncides, Promethides, Teleclides, Meneclides, Eclides, Androchides, Euchides, and Euryclides are first represented as accented on the penultimate, and, immediately after, are incorrectly included in the list of those accented on the antepenultimate.

In the present revision, these inconsistencies have been removed. Walker's Terminational Vocabulary has been compared throughout with the Initial Vocabulary as now enlarged and corrected, and, in cases of discrepancy, the accentuation has been conformed to that adopted in the latter. Where the true accent of a word is doubtful, the uncertainty is indicated by a note of interrogation.

It has already been mentioned, that Walker's Terminational Vocabulary contains a large number of words not to be found in his Initial Vocabulary. Most of these words have been allowed to remain; but, though obvious mistakes have been rectified, Walker, in general, is responsible for their orthography and pronunciation.

The classical scholar, as well as the common reader, may find it convenient to have at hand a synopsis of the more important terminations of Greek and Latin proper names which serve to determine the quantity of the penultimate. As most of these terminations are significant, their meaning has been indicated in the lists which are subjoined, by giving either the root, or a derivative of the same origin.

The following rules will serve as a guide to the accentuation of a large number of proper names.

I. LONG PENULTIMATE.

1. The penult is long, with very few exceptions, in Greek and Latin proper names of the following terminations:—

ānor, anīra (ἀνήρ, man), as Nica'nor, Deliani'ra.

āon, as Lyca'on.

brī'ca or brī'ga, in names of Celtic origin, as Conimbri'ca, Segobri'ga. See p. 1705, note †.

būlus, būle, or būla (βουλή, counsel), in Greek names, as Thrasybu'lus, Neobu'le.

clēa or clīa (κλέω, to celebrate), as Agathocle'a. Except Do'clea or Dio'clea, a town.

clīdes, as Euclī'des.

clītus or clētus (κλειτός, famous), as Heracil'tus, Polycle'tus.

cūdes (κῦδος, glory), as Pherecy'des.

dātes (Zend dāta, given), in many Persian names, as Mithrida'tes.

damīa (δαμάω, to subdue), as Laodami'a.

dāmus (Doric δᾶμος for δῆμος, people), as Archida'mus. Except Lyg'damus, and Hippodāmus, from ἵππος, horse, and δαμάω, to tame.

dēmus (δῆμος, people), as Aristode'mus.

dōrus, dōra (δῶρον, gift), as Diodo'rus, Pando'ra.

dānum (comp. Gael. dun, a hill, fortress; W. din, dinas, city; Sax. tun, enclosure, town), as Lugdu'num.

dūrum (Ir. and Gael. dur, W. dor, Arm. dour, water), as Salodu'rum, Soleurs.

ēs, as Ene'is. In Nereis the penult is sometimes short.

ēnor (ἀνήρ, man; comp. -anor), as Ante'nor.

frēdus or frīdus (Old Ger. frīdu, peace), as Alfre'dus, Godefrī'dus.

gēna (γένος, birth, race), as Iphigeni'a.

tnum, as Tauri'num.

lāus (λαός, people), as Agesila'us. Except Ag'lāus, Tal'aus.

mēdes, medīa, (μῆδος, counsel), as Archime'des, Iphimedi'a.

mēlus (μῆλον, sheep; also apple), as Eume'lus.

nēsus (νήσος, island), as Chersone'sus.

nīcus, nīce, or nīca, when derived from νίκη, victory, as Androni'cus, Stratonī'ce, Thessaloni'ca. This rule does not apply to adjectives in nīcus, in which the n does not belong to the termination.

ōdes (except -pōdes), as Hero'des.

ōtes (except -pōtes), as Boo'tes.

ōtus, as Mēo'tis. Except Cas'sotis.

rīcus (Old Ger. rīchi, rich, powerful), as Alari'cus, Henri'cus. Except in adjectives.

tīmus (τίμη, honor), as Dioti'mus. Except Nyc'timus.

ūnus, ūna, ūnum, ūni, as Neptu'nus, Vacu'na.

ūrus, as Arctu'rus, Epicu'rus. Except Anx'urus.

ūsa, as Medu'sa. Except Eu'sa.

vīcus (Old Ger. wīg, battle; comp. Eng. to vie), in names of Teutonic origin, as Ludovi'cus.

zānes or barzānes, in Persian names, as Ariobarza'nes.

2. Words derived from names of places or persons, and ending in nus (with its variations for gender and number), and tes or ta (with its plural tes and feminine tis), are accented on the penult; as Roma'nus, Flavia'nus, Damasce'nus, Alexandri'nus; and so Roma'na, Roma'ni, Roma'num, &c.; — Sparta'tes, a Spartan, plural Spartia'tes, Ægine'tes or -ta, Abderi'tes or -ta, Heracleo'tes; — Spartia'tis, Sybari'tis, Phlioi'tis.

To this rule may be added derivative names of countries in ane, ene, and ine; as Bactria'ne or -na, Palmyre'ne, Acra'batti'ne.

3. The penult is also long in plurals in ates from Latin gentile nouns in as; as Capena'tes, from Capenas, an inhabitant of Capena.

4. Adjectives in eus (εἰος), derived from names of persons or places, are almost always accented on the penult; as Epicure'us, Epicurean, from Epicurus. So names of cities, of similar derivation, in ea or ia, and names of temples or sacred places in eum, being originally adjectives; as Cæsare'a, the city of Cæsar, Antiochi'a, the city of Antiochus; These'um, the temple of Theseus.

5. The penult is also long in patronymics in ides when derived from nouns in eus (εἰς) and ides. See more fully below, II. 2.

6. Barbarous names, Latinized by the addition of the terminations us, a, um, are generally accented on the penult; as Ada'mus, Elizabe'tha, Milto'nus.

But, according to Labbe, the termination arus is usually excepted from this rule, and accented on the antepenult; as Ed'garus.

II. SHORT PENULTIMATE.

1. The penult is short, with very few exceptions, in Greek and Latin proper names of the following terminations:—

ādes, as Milti'ades. Except Dema'des, contracted from Demeades.

anētus (αἰνός, praised, praiseworthy), as Aristen'etus.

agōras (ἀγορά, a public assembly), as Anaxag'oras.

ālus, as Dæd'alus. Except Pharsa'lus, Symphā'lus, Sardanapa'lus.

ānaz (ἄναξ, king), as Asty'anax.

brōtus (βροτός, a mortal), as Cleom'brutus.

chōrus (χῳρός, favor), as Democh'ares.

chōrus, chōre (χορός, dance, choir), as Stesich'orus, Terpsich'ore.

cles (κλέω, to celebrate), as Meg'acles, Men'ecles, Per'icles, Soph'ocles, Bath'yctes.

cōla, cōla (colo, to cultivate, to inhabit), as Agric'ola.

crītes (κράτος, strength), as Hippoc'rates.

crītus (κρίτης, from κρίνω, to separate, judge, choose), as Democ'rītus.

dāmas (δαμάω, to subdue), as Alcīd'amas. This termination must not be confounded with dāmus.

dīcus, dīce (δίκη, justice), as Prod'icus, Euryd'ice.

dōcus, dōce (δέχομαι, to receive), as Laod'ocus, Cymod'oce.

dōtus, dōta (δοτός, given), as Herod'otus, Theod'ota.

gēna (γίγνα, root gen-, to produce), as Phœbig'ena. Except Comage'na.

gēnes (γένος, birth, race), as Diog'enes.

gōnus, gōne (γόνος, offspring), as Antig'onus, Antig'one.

lycus (λύκος, wolf? or obsol. λύκη, light?), as Autol'ycus.
lytus (λύτος, loosed, freed), as Hippol'ytus.
máchus, máche (μάχη, battle), as Lysim'achus, Androm'ache.
mághus (supposed to mean town), in names of Celtic origin, as Rotom'agus.
mēdon (μέδων, ruler, guardian), as Laom'edon.
mēnes (μένος, spirit, strength; Sansc. manas, mind), as Eu'menes, Artam'enes.
nōmus, nōme (νόμος, law, νομός, pasture), as Eu'nomus, Eury'n'ome.
nūs, nōe (νός, νόος, mind), as Antin'ous, Philon'oe.
ōchus (ἔχω, to hold), as Anti'ochus. Including ōchus (δοχός, receiving), as Xenod'ochus; and lōchus (λόχος, band of soldiers), as Archil'ochus.
onymus (ὄνομα, name), as Hieron'ymus.
pāter, pātor (πάτηρ, father), as Antip'ater, Eu'pator.
phāghus, plural phāgi (φάγειν, to eat), as Lotoph'agi.
phānes (φαίνω, to show, shine), as Aristoph'anes.
phēlus, phēla (φίλος, friendly, loving), as Theoph'ilus, Pam'phila.
phon, as Xen'ophon.
phōrus (φορός, bearing), as Niceph'orus.
phron (φρόν, mind), as Al'ciphron.
pōdes (πόδες, feet), as Antip'odes.

polēmus, ptolēmus (πόλεμος, war), as Eupol'emus, Neoptol'emus.
pōlis (πόλις, city), as Decap'olis.
pylus, pyle (πύλη, gate), as Eurypp'yilus, Hypsip'yile.
sthēnes (σθένος, strength), as Demos'thenes.
strātus, strāta (στράτης, army), as Philos'tratus, Nicos'trata.
tēles (τέλος, end, revenue), as Praxit'eles.
thēus (θεός, God), as Timo'theus.
thon, as Mar'athon.
thōus, thōe (θοός, quick), as Alcath'ous, Hippoth'oe.
vīri (vīri, men), as Trium'viri.
zēnus, zēna (ξένος, stranger, guest), as Aristox'enus, Polyr'ena.

2. The penult is short in patronymics in ides, as Priam'ides, from Priamus. Except, however, those which are formed by contraction, to which class belong all derived from nouns ending in the monosyllabic ōis (οῖς) and cles; e. g. Atrei'des (for Atreides), from Atreūs; Androcl'ides, from Androcles. Except also Amphiara'ides, Amych'ides, Beli'des (sing.), and Lycurg'ides.

The rule above given relates to the singular number. The plural termination ides (in feminine patronymics) is always short; as Hesper'ides, daughters of Hesperus.

PRONUNCIATION OF SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

PREFACE.

THE following INITIAL VOCABULARY contains all the proper names which occur in the common English version of the Bible, including the Apocrypha. It embraces also a few Hebrew or Aramaean words which are not proper names, but, being found in the English Bible, seem to demand notice in a pronouncing dictionary, as Talitha, Ephphatha, Sabachthani. In preparing the Vocabulary, great pains has been taken to secure completeness and accuracy. The Old Testament proper names have been derived chiefly from "The Englishman's Hebrew and Chaldee Concordance," London, 1843, and the Rev. Alfred Jones's "Proper Names of the Old Testament Scriptures, Expounded and Illustrated," London, 1856; the names contained in the Apocrypha have been gathered by a careful examination of the books themselves; and, for the New Testament, the "Englishman's Greek Concordance" has been used. In every case of doubt respecting the orthography of a name, recourse has been had to the passages of Scripture in which it occurs; and, in many instances, all these passages have been examined in more than one copy. In this examination, the following editions of the Bible have been chiefly used: 1. Exact Reprint of the First Edition (1611), Oxford, 1833, 4to.; 2. Pearl reference octavo, London, printed by Eyre and Spottiswoode, 1845; 3. Crown quarto with references, Oxford, 1850.

The importance of this thorough revision is shown by the fact, that of the 3950 words, more or less, contained in Walker's Vocabulary, about 500 have been rejected, in the present work, as having no title to a place in a collection of Scripture Proper Names; while, on the other hand, about 746 have been added, as occurring in Scripture, though not given by Walker. Of those rejected, some are not proper names, but are words found in common English dictionaries, as anathema, beryl, brigandine, calamus, centurion, chalcidony, cubit, didrachm, ephod, gier-eagle, habergeon, hyena, lignuloes, ligure, manna, onycha, onyx, ospray, ossifrage, phylacteries, ruby, supphire, sardine, sardius, sardonyx, scribes, sycamine, synagogue, tetrarch, and others of a similar character;—some do not occur in Scripture, as Algurus, Apocalypse, Archestratus, Azymiles, Cairites (?), Xagus, Xeneas, Xerolybe, Xerophagia, Xyslus;—many have found their way into the Vocabulary, indirectly, from the Latin Vulgate, as Abesan for Ibzan, Achab for Ahab, Achimelech for Ahimelech, &c.;—but a still larger portion are mere misprints, like Abacue for Abacuc, Abishahar for Ahishahar, Achaichus for Achaicus, Ahitophel for Ahithophel, Agnoth-tabor for Aznoth-tabor, &c.

The Vocabulary of "Scripture Proper Names" which is appended to Taylor's edition of Calmet, and has been copied in some English dictionaries, contains most of the errors above enumerated, and many others of a similar kind. We find there such proper names as agate, almug, amethyst, apostle, carbuncle, cassia, chamelion [sic], chrysolite, chrysoprasus, drachma, galbanum, jacinth, jasper, quaternion, sackbut, stacte, tache, &c.;—such Scripture proper names as Adonis, Astarte, Cambyses, Rusticus;—and such misprints as Elhuyman for Elhanan, Emanuel for Emmanuel, Evasibus for Enasibus, Golius for Goliath, Lybia for Libya, Syntiche for Syntyche, Telahim for Telaim, &c.

In the present Vocabulary, with the exception of Adonai, Elohim, and four or five words derived by Walker directly or indirectly from the Latin Vulgate, Josephus, or Milton, and retained here for special reasons, as Achitophel (see Dryden), Ada, Asmoneans, Asochis, and Asmadai, no word has been intentionally admitted which is not to be found in some good edition of the common English Bible.

THE TERMINATIONAL VOCABULARY, which in Walker made no approximation to completeness, has been compared throughout with the Initial Vocabulary, and brought into entire correspondence with it. In this Vocabulary, a note of interrogation is placed after certain names of which Walker's accentuation may be regarded as questionable, though allowed to stand first in the Initial Vocabulary. If Walker had undertaken to give a complete Terminational Vocabulary, a regard for consistency might have led him to pronounce some words differently.

With respect to pronunciation, Walker has been followed, except in a few instances, in most of which he is inconsistent with himself, or has gone counter to his acknowledged principles; as in the words Arabattine, Aretas, Beer-lahairoi (compare Lahairoi), Baal Hamon, Baal Hanan, Chushan Rishathaim, Cuthah, Dessdu, Eleuzai, Elioenai, Elmodam, Eshkiulites, Gortyna, Jairus, Jeshaiah (compare Jesaiuh), Melea, Nereus, Sardeus, Siloah, Siloum, Siloe, Tubieni, and Urbane. The pronunciation of Oliver, in his Scripture Lexicon (2d ed., 1787), Perry (10th English ed., and occasionally the 9th), Smart, Carr, and Taylor in his edition of Calmet's Dictionary of the Bible (2d ed., London, 1832), has also been compared, and all deviations from Walker noted which were deemed worthy of attention. It would answer no good purpose to exhibit without remark such oversights on the part of these orthoepists (or their printers) as A-cha-i'a, A-cha-i'cus, Ga-i'us, Sad-du'cees, &c. in Oliver;—Andron'icus, Aquil'a, Ar'che-laus, Aristob'ulus, Dio-tré'phes, Eu'bulus, Laodid'ea, Procho'rus, &c. in Perry;—and Antipa'tris, Cenchre'a, Dosithe'us, Epené'tus, Patro'bas, &c. in Taylor. On the other hand, in a considerable number of cases, the pronunciation given by one or more of these authorities is doubtless to be preferred to that of Walker. But his pronunciation, on the whole, has received the sanction of the best usage in this country and in England; and the task of critically reexamining his decisions has not been undertaken in the present work.

The Greek and Latin proper names which occur in the New Testament and in the Apocrypha are pronounced according to the same principles as other Greek and Latin proper names.

(1737)

The true pronunciation of the Hebrew language is lost. We have, indeed, the traditional pronunciation of the Jews, as indicated by the Masoretic vowel-points and accents. But even if this were unquestionably correct, it is so contrary to the analogy of our own language, that no one would think of adopting it in the pronunciation of the Hebrew names which occur in the English Bible. In a great majority of words of two syllables, as, for example, Amos, David, it would require us to place the accent on the last. In words of more than two syllables, the Jewish accent, and the quantity of the vowels, may be entitled to some regard. But other more important considerations in determining the pronunciation of Hebrew proper names are the mode in which they are represented in the Greek of the Septuagint, the usage of the poets ancient and modern, English analogy, established custom, and euphony. It is evident that in balancing these considerations, and applying them to particular cases, there will be much room for diversity of opinion. Walker regards the Septuagint version as "our chief guide," though this must often fail us.

The preceding remarks apply principally to the accent. In respect to the sound of the vowels, and the division of words into syllables, the proper names which are derived from the Hebrew generally follow the same rules that are observed in the pronunciation of Greek and Latin proper names.

RULES OF PRONUNCIATION.

1. One of the principal differences between the pronunciation of the Hebrew proper names and that of the Greek and Latin, relates to the sound of the letter g, which, in Greek and Latin names, is soft before e, i, and y; as, Gellius, Gippius, Gyas; but in Hebrew names it is hard; as, Gerizim, Gideon; except Bethphage, which, by passing through the Greek of the New Testament, has become conformed to the rule relating to words from the Greek.

2. The digraph ch, in Hebrew names, is sounded hard, like k; as, Chebar, Enoch; but the words Rachel, Cherubim, also Cherub (an angel), are Anglicized in their pronunciation, the ch being sounded like ch in cheer; but Cherub, a city, is pronounced Kerub.

3. Every final i, forming a distinct syllable, though unaccented, is pronounced with its long sound; as, A'i, Aris'a-i.

4. The two vowels ai are sometimes pronounced in one syllable; as, Mor'de-cai; and sometimes in two; as, Hag'ga-i.

5. The two vowels ia, when preceded by a vowel, are sometimes pronounced in one syllable, and sometimes in two. When pronounced in one syllable, the i is sounded like y consonant; as, Benai'ah (Be-na'yah), Isai'ah (I-sa'yah). When pronounced in two syllables, the accent is on the i; as, Ad-a-i'ah.

6. The diphthong ei is pronounced, according to Walker, like ee, Ceilan (Sē'lan). When ei is followed by a vowel, the i is usually sounded like y consonant; as, Iphideiah (If-e-dē'yah), Sameius (Sa-mē'yus).

7. Gentile names ending in ene, ine, and ite, with their plurals, being Anglicized, are pronounced like English formatives; as, Nazarene', Philistine, Gad'ites, Am'monite, Ish'maēlites; except Magdale'ne. Words of this class ending in ite have the accent on the same syllable as their primitives.

8. The consonants c, s, and t, before ia and iu, preceded by the accent, in a number of Scripture names, take the sound of sh; as, Cappadocia, Asia, Galatia, Tertius. See Pronunciation of Greek and Latin Proper Names, Rule 1.

INITIAL VOCABULARY.

The figures appended to certain words refer to the Rules of Pronunciation, on the preceding page.

cessive accents.—WALKER. See James in this Dictionary.
 || Arabattine.—The accentuation of this word on the antepenultimate by Walker and other orthoepists is contrary to all analogy. The penultimate vowel in Greek derivatives of this class ending in ane, ene, and ine, is always long. The marginal reading of modern editions of the English Bible, in 1 Macc. v. 3, Arabattine, gives the name in a more correct form.

[illegible]

* Des'se-u.—The Greek is Δεσσαού. 2. Macc. xiv. 16.

† Elmō'dam. — The Greek is Ἐλμωδάμ. Luke iii. 28.

* Ja'i-rus, and Ja-i'rus.—In the Apocrypha (Esth. xi. 2) the Greek is Ἰάριπος, and, according to Walker's rules for pronunciation, the penultimate must be accented on the first syllable; but in the New Testament it is Ἰάριπος, and, according to Walker's rules for pronunciation, the penultimate must receive the accent.

* Silo'ah, Silo'am, Silo'e.—Walker, in his note on the name Siloa, admits that "this word, according to the present general rule of pronouncing these words, ought to have the accent on the second syllable, as it is Græcized by Σιλωά;" but he defers to the authority of Milton, who accents it on the antepenultima. But Shiloah, which is merely a variation of the same word, is accented by Walker and all other orthoepists on the second syllable, in accordance with its accent in Hebrew, and the analogy of Manoah, Tekoa, Zanoah. The more common form Sileam is Σιλωάν in the Greek of the New Testament and of Josephus. Such being the case, let that Milton in a single passage (Par. Lost, i. 11) accents Siloe on the first syllable does not seem to justify us in deserting a general rule. If the usage of the poets is appealed to, the familiar hymn of Bishop Heber may be cited:—"By cool Silo'am's shady rill," &c.

† Thadde'us.—All the orthoepists agree in accenting this word on the penultimate; but when it is used as a Christian name, the accent, in this country at least, is usually placed on the first syllable.

† Urban.—"So it ought to be printed in our modern Bibles, not 'Urbane,' which is now descriptive, though it was not so according to the orthography of 1611; it suggests a triyllable, and the termination of a female name. It is Ὀυρβανὸν in the original." (Rom. xvi. 9).—TRENCH, On the Authorized Version, &c. p. 60, note, Amer. edition.

The word is spelt Urban in the translations of Wickliffe, Tyndale, and Cranmer. The Geneva version and the Roman Catholic translation retain the Latin form, Urbanus.

THE pronunciation of geographical names is a very difficult branch of orthoepy. These names pertain to all parts of the globe; their vernacular or native pronunciation is regulated or affected by every variety of language; and it would be impossible to represent, in all cases, the native pronunciation by any combination of English letters.

There are a great many names, respecting the pronunciation of which it is difficult to determine how far the English analogy should be allowed to prevail over the analogy of the languages to which the words respectively belong. If we look for authorities for the pronunciation of these names, we find comparatively few; and most of such authorities as exist embrace but a small part of the words of this class; and there is also much disagreement among orthoepists with respect to the pronunciation of such of these names as they undertake to pronounce.

With regard to the geographical names which pertain to all the countries in which the English language is spoken, including the British empire in Europe, the United States, and the British provinces generally, their pronunciation is, of course, conformed, for the most part, to the analogy of the English language. In addition to these, all the geographical names which belong to other parts of the globe, but which have become Anglicized by having changed their native form and assumed an English orthography, are also conformed to the general principles of English pronunciation. The most common geographical names, such as those which relate to the great divisions of the globe, the names of the countries, kingdoms, states, principal cities, &c., are differently written, as well as differently pronounced, in different languages. The following table exhibits a few examples of this diversity, by way of illustration:—

English.	French.	German.	Spanish.	Italian.
Asia,	Asie,	Asien,	Asia,	Asia.
Africa,	Afrique,	Afrika,	Africa,	Affrica.
Europe,	Europe,	Europa,	Europa,	Europa.
America,	Amérique,	Amerika,	America,	America.
England,	Angleterre,	England,	Inglaterra,	Inghilterra.
Spain,	Espagne,	Spanien,	España,	Spagna.
Italy,	Italie,	Italien,	Italia,	Italia.
Germany,	Allemagne,	Deutschland,	Alemania,	Germania.
Austria,	Autriche,	Oesterreich,	Austria,	Austria.
Sweden,	Suède,	Schweden,	Suecia,	Svezia.
London,	Londres,	London,	Londres,	Londra.
Leghorn,	Livourne,	Livorno,	Liorna,	Livorno.

There can be no doubt but that geographical names, which assume such different forms in different languages, should be pronounced differently by the inhabitants of different countries, and in accordance with the analogies of their respective languages. All the common geographical names, such as are familiar to all intelligent persons, have become more or less Anglicized, and their pronunciation is more or less conformed to the English analogy. Many of these words may be considered as perfectly Anglicized, and they are accordingly pronounced as common English words;

but there are many that are only partially Anglicized, and with regard to such it is often difficult to determine how far, in pronouncing them, the English analogy should be allowed to prevail over that of the language to which the words properly belong.

Some foreign geographical names are introduced into the English language without changing their orthography; but their pronunciation is, nevertheless, conformed to the English analogy. The word Paris, for example, an Englishman or an Anglo-American, in speaking his own language, would pronounce, in conformity to it, Par'is; though, if he were speaking French, he would pronounce it pà're, in conformity with the French language.

With respect to the class of words which are partially Anglicized, there is a great diversity in the manner of pronouncing them. Some respectable speakers incline to pronounce them, for the most part, according to the English analogy, while others aspire to pronounce them as they are pronounced in the several languages to which they appertain; and there are many cases in which it is difficult to determine which is to be the more approved, the English or the foreign method. A person conversant with foreign languages will be likely to pronounce such words in the foreign manner; while a mere English scholar may be naturally expected, and may be permitted, to incline more strongly to the English mode. It may be often desirable to know what the native mode of pronouncing such words is, though it may not be advisable, in common use, to adopt it.

Proper names are more subject to a corrupt pronunciation, or one which is not conformed to the orthography, than common names. A considerable number of the geographical names pertaining to England are pronounced very differently from what their orthography indicates; as, for example, Chertsey and Cirencester, commonly pronounced ches'se and siss'e-ter. Americans are somewhat less inclined to deviate from orthography, in the pronunciation of some words, than the English are. Berwick and Warwick, for example, which are pronounced in England ber'ik and wor'ik, are very often pronounced, in the United States, as they are spelt.

The following Vocabulary was originally prepared as an appendage to the Comprehensive Dictionary, and was annexed to that work in 1835. In preparing it, use was made of a great variety of sources of information, one of the most considerable of which was Earnshaw's "Concise Gazetteer, exhibiting the Pronunciation of the Names." It has since been considerably enlarged and improved, by further inquiry, and by the examination of various new authorities, particularly Mr. Baldwin's "Universal Pronouncing Gazetteer," a work first published in 1845, Lippincott's "Pronouncing Gazetteer of the World," published in 1855, and Müller's "Wörterbuch der ausländischer Eigennamen," third edition, 1849. Still, this Vocabulary, in its present state, is very imperfect. The pronunciation affixed to many of the words may be objected to as not the most proper. A person much versed in foreign languages will be likely to think that the pronunciation generally has been too much Anglicized; while a mere English scholar will think it is not sufficiently so; and both may, doubtless, make out a plausible case in favor of their respective views. But, defective as it is, it is hoped that it will not be found a useless appendage to a pronouncing dictionary.

PRONUNCIATION OF SEVERAL EUROPEAN LANGUAGES.

THE following rules, respecting the pronunciation of certain letters in the principal modern languages of Continental Europe, may be of some use in relation to the pronunciation of names pertaining to the several countries where these languages are spoken, and which are not included in the present vocabulary. Yet it may be advisable for a mere English scholar to make but a partial application of them in practice.

VOWELS.

A.—The vowel a, in situations in which the analogy of the English language would naturally give it the sound of long a, has, in most of the languages of the Continent of Europe, what is called the Italian sound, that is, the sound of a in far and farther. In other situations, its sound approaches nearly to its short English sound, as in man, fat.

E.—In these languages, the sound of the vowel e, at the end of an accented syllable, is generally the same as that of the English long a in fate, name. In other situations, it has the sound of the English short e, as in met, men, or of e in there, where.

I.—The long sound of i, in these languages, is the same as in the English word marine, being the same as the English long sound of e in mete, seen. The short sound is the same as its English short sound, as in pin.

O.—The vowel o has the same sounds that it has in English in the words note, not, and nor.

U.—The vowel u, in most of these languages, has the same sound that it has in English in the word rule, being the same as oo in fool, moon, and, when short, it has the sound of u in bull, or of oo in good. The sound of u in the French language, and also in the Dutch, has no equivalent sound in English; and it can be learned only by oral instruction. It may be regarded as intermediate between the sound of long e and oo, partaking of both.

Y.—The vowel y has, in most of these languages, the same sound as i, that is, of long e, as in me; but in the Dutch language (in which it is now written y), it has the sound of the English long i, as in pine. In Danish and Swedish, it is like the French and Dutch u.

DIPHTHONGS.

AE or Ä.—The sound of the diphthong ae, in Dutch, is like the English sound of a in far; in German, the sound of ae or a is like that of the English long a, as in fate.

AI.—The sound of the diphthong ai, in French, is like that of the English long a, as in fate; in the other languages, like that of the English long i, as in pine.

AU and EAU.—The diphthong au, and the triphthong eau, in French, have the sound of the English long o, as in note; as Chaumont (shō-mōng'), Beauvais (bō-vā'). In German, Dutch, Danish, Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese, the diphthong au has nearly the English sound of ow in now; as, Austerlitz (ōts'ter-lits). The German diphthong au, or aeu, has a sound like that of the English diphthong oi in toil; as, Staudlin (stōit'lin).

EI and EY.—The diphthong ei, in French, sounds like the English long a in fate. In German, the diphthongs ei and ey have a sound similar to the English sound of long i, as in pine; as, Heidel-berg.

EU.—The French diphthong eu has a sound similar to the English sound of e in her, or u in fur. The German diphthong eu has a sound similar to that of the English diphthong oi in toil; as, Neustadt (nōy'stat).

IE.—The diphthong ie, in French, German, Dutch, &c., has the sound of the English long e, as in mete; as, Wieland.

OE or Ö.—The sound of the German, Danish, and Swedish diphthong oe or ö resembles that of the French eu. It has no equivalent sound in English, and is not easily explained. It may be conceived as intermediate between the long English sounds of a and o, and resulting from an attempt to utter them simultaneously. It may be approximately represented in English by eh, as in the name of Goethe or Göthe (pronounced geh'tā).

OO.—The diphthong oo, in German, Dutch, and Danish, has the sound of oo in the English word door, or of o in note.

OU.—The French diphthong ou has the sound of the English oo in tool; as, Tou-lousse (tō-lōz').

UE or Ü.—The sound of the German, Dutch, and Danish diphthong ue or ü, is like that of the French u.

CONSONANTS.

The sounds of most of the consonants, in the Continental languages, are the same as in English. Some of the principal exceptions are the following:—

B.—The sound of b, in German, at the end of a syllable, is like that of the English p;—in Spanish, between two vowels, similar to v.

C.—The sound of c, in German, before e, i, and y, is like that of ts in English;—in Italian, before e and i, like that of ch in the English word chill; in Spanish, before e and i, like that of th in thin.

D.—The sound of d, in German and Dutch, at the end of a syllable, is like that of t in English;—in Danish and Spanish, between two vowels or at the end of a syllable, like that of th in this.

G.—The sound of g, in French, before e, i, and y, is like that of zh in English, or of s in pleasure;—in Spanish, before e and i, the same as the Spanish j;—in Italian, before e and i, like that of g in the English word gem, or j in jet;—in Dutch, its sound is that of a strongly aspirated h;—in German, at the beginning of words, it is hard, like g in get; at the end of a syllable, or between vowels, it has a peculiar sound intermediate between those of consonant y and of g in yet; following n, it combines with it in a nasal sound, as in English,—and in words ending in ngen, it is thrown back on the penultimate syllable; as, Hech'ing-en.

H.—This letter is mute in French, Spanish, and Italian;—in Portuguese, when it follows l or n, it takes the sound of consonant y, or serves as a sign that the l has a liquid sound; as, Alinho (uññ'vō).

J.—The sound of j, in French and Portuguese, is like that of zh in English;—in Spanish, it is like that of h strongly aspirated;—in Italian, and also in Hungarian when not preceded by d, y, or t, it is like the long English e in me;—in the remaining languages, it is like that of consonant y.

M.—This letter, in French, when preceded by a vowel, and followed by any other consonant except m, serves to mark the vowel as nasal. It is represented, in English, by ng.

N.—The letter n, in French, when preceded by a vowel, and followed by any other consonant except n, also serves as a sign that the preceding vowel is nasal;—in Spanish, ñ has a liquid sound, like that of n in the English word name, blended with the sound of consonant y.

V.—The sound of v in German, is the same as that of f in English.

W.—The sound of w, in the German and Dutch languages, is similar to that of v in English.

X.—The sound of x, in Spanish, is like that of h strongly aspirated, being the same as that of the Spanish j, and also of g before e and i;—in Portuguese, it is like sh in the English word shall.

Z.—The sound of z in German, and most generally in Italian, is like that of ts in English;—in Spanish, like th in the English word thin;—zz in Italian, like ts.

DIGRAPHS.

CH.—The sound of the digraph ch, in French and Portuguese, is the same as the English sh, or of ch in chaise;—in Spanish, the same as ch in the English word chill;—in Italian (as in words from the ancient languages, Hebrew, Greek, and Latin), like that of k.—In German and Dutch, it has a hard, guttural sound, not easily represented in English, but resembling that of h strongly aspirated. It is represented in this Vocabulary, as it is in others, by the letter k.

GL.—This digraph, in Italian, blends the sounds of l and consonant y.

GN.—This digraph, in French and Italian, sounds like the Spanish ñ, or like the letters ni in the English word onion.

LL.—The sound of ll, in Spanish, is like that of gl in Italian, or that of the letters li in the English word million.

SC.—This digraph, in Italian, before e and i, is sounded like sh in the English word shell.

SCH.—The sound of sch, in German, is the same as that of sh in the English word shell;—in Italian, before e and i, and also in Dutch, like that of sh in the English word skill.

ACCENT.

In the French language, there is no recognized accented syllable, every vowel (the mute or obscure e only excepted) receiving a full and distinct utterance; but in English representations of the pronunciation of French words, the last syllable is generally marked as having an accent. The same is true of Hungarian words. In the Dutch, German, Danish, and Swedish languages, the principal accent falls upon the radical syllable of a word, and, in general, will naturally be given correctly by an English reader. Italian words, and words ending in a vowel in Spanish and Portuguese, are generally accented on the penultimate syllable; but there are numerous exceptions, especially in Italian. Spanish and Portuguese words ending in a consonant are mostly accented on the last syllable. The seat of the accent in Polish words is always the penultimate syllable. Russian words are almost always accented on the last syllable; but in our pronunciation of them, they are often conformed to the analogy of English words.

OF

This list contains only such names of distinguished men of modern times as are of difficult or uncertain pronunciation. Only a small number of English or American names is here given.

The names of some distinguished foreigners are Anglicized in their pronunciation, differing much from that given to them in their native country.

See Remarks on the Pronunciation of several European Languages, prefixed to the Pronunciation of Geographical Names.

The abbreviations B., El., M., P., and Wr. represent the names of Beeton, Ellis, Muller, Pierer, and Wright, respectively.

Many of the asteroids were formerly designated by emblematic signs, similar to those which are used for the larger planets. The mode of representing them by a circle enclosing the number indicating the order of their discovery, is the one generally adopted at the present day. The first four asteroids, however, are still occasionally designated by the following characters:—

♄, or ♄	Ceres.	♅, or ♅	Juno.
♁, or ♁	Pallas.	♁, or ♁	Vesta.

THE ZODIAC.

Spring signs.	♈ Aries, the Ram. ♉ Taurus, the Bull. ♊ Gemini, the Twins.	Autumn signs.	♏ Libra, the Balance. ♏ Scorpio, the Scorpion. ♐ Sagittarius, the Archer.
Summer signs.	♋ Cancer, the Crab. ♌ Leo, the Lion. ♍ Virgo, the Virgin.	Winter signs.	♐ Capricornus, the Goat. ♑ Aquarius, the Waterman. ♒ Pisces, the Fishes.

♂	Male.	00, or ∞	Indefinite in number.

CHEMICAL.

- In organic chemistry, a line drawn over one of the letters representing the elementary bodies, denotes the substance to be an acid; thus \overline{M} represents malic acid.
- + A cross drawn over a letter denotes the substance represented by the letter to be an alkaloid; thus \overline{Qu} represents quinine.
- Dots over a letter denote oxygen, the number of dots indicating the number of equivalents; thus \ddot{S} denotes one equivalent of sulphur and three equivalents of oxygen, forming sulphuric acid.
- Commas are sometimes used to denote sulphur, the number of commas indicating the number of equivalents; thus $Fe,$ denotes one equivalent of iron and two equivalents of sulphur, forming bisulphide of iron.

In chemical formulæ, every elementary substance is represented by an abbreviation, or symbol, consisting of the first letter or letters of its Latin name; as, O for oxygen, H for hydrogen, Fe for iron (L. ferrum). These symbols will be found in the preceding table of "Abbreviations used in Writing and Printing." When used singly, these symbols always represent one equivalent of the body which they indicate. A compound body, composed of single equivalents, is represented by writing the two symbols side by side; thus, HO indicates one equivalent of water. If more than one equivalent of a body has to be expressed, it is signified either by prefixing the number, as 2 H, two equivalents of hydrogen, or, as is more usual, by writing a small figure to the right of the letter below the line, as H_2 : HO_2 would indicate peroxide of hydrogen; CO_2 , carbonic acid. Secondary compounds, such as salts, are expressed in an analogous way, the base being always placed first, $CaO + CO_2$ representing one equivalent of carbonate of lime. Frequently a comma is placed between the two compounds instead of the algebraic sign +. Where it is necessary to indicate more than one equivalent of a compound, the whole formula of that compound is included within parentheses, and preceded by the indicating number. Thus, three equivalents of carbonate of lime would be written 3 (Ca O, CO_2). The figure prefixed multiplies nothing beyond the symbols included within the parentheses. Frequently the employment of parentheses is neglected, and then the figures multiply all the symbols included between them and the next comma or sign of addition.

- e* notes the base of the Naperian system of logarithms, which is 2.718281828.
M denotes the modulus of any system of logarithms.
 ∞ In the common system, M denotes 0.434294482... &c.
 ∞ denotes an infinitely large quantity, or a quantity greater than any assignable quantity, as, $\frac{A}{0} = \infty$.

MISCELLANEOUS.

&c, & — And. — &c. (Et cetera.) And the rest; and so forth.

This character is a corruption of the Latin word Et (and), the letters E and L (\mathcal{E} , \mathcal{L}), being written with a single stroke of the pen. On sign-boards, and in books printed previously to the beginning of the present century, the character & frequently has this form, \mathcal{E} , in which the letters E and L are more distinctly seen.

- 4to, or 4°. Quarto, four leaves, or eight pages, to a sheet.
 8vo, or 8°. Octavo, eight leaves, or sixteen pages, to a sheet.
 12mo, or 12°. Duodecimo, twelve leaves, or twenty-four pages, to a sheet.
 16mo, or 16°. Sexto-decimo, sixteen leaves, or thirty-two pages, to a sheet.
 18mo, or 18°. Octo-decimo, eighteen leaves, or thirty-six pages, to a sheet.

When the sheets of a book are folded into more leaves and pages than those named above, the number of leaves is designated by the proper Arabic numerals with the termination mo, or o, affixed; thus, 24mo, or 24°, and 48mo, or 48°, denote books in which the sheets are folded into twenty-four and forty-eight leaves respectively. As there are no corresponding Latin names in use, such characters must be regarded as mere signs, and must be read as English words.

- * Used in Roman Catholic church-books to divide each verse of a psalm into two parts, showing where the responses begin.
 + or ✕ Used in Roman Catholic service-books, in those places of the prayers and benediction where the priest is to make the sign of the cross. It is also used in the briefs of the pope, and in the mandates of archbishops and bishops immediately before the subscription of their names.
 X A sign by which persons who cannot write are accustomed to attest instruments, their names JOHN X THOMAS. being added by those who can write; as — 3 A common abbreviation for terminations, in use in the middle ages. Being in form somewhat like a z, it came to be represented among the early printers by that letter, and is still retained in the abbreviations oz. for ounce, and viz. for vide licet.

Y, or y A corruption of the Anglo-Saxon character \mathfrak{p} , or \mathfrak{th} , found in the antiquated abbreviations ye, for the, yt, for that, &c.

HAMLET'S ADVICE TO THE PLAYERS.

S. caps. Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue; but, if you mouth it, as many of our players do, I had as lief the town crier spoke my lines. Nor, do not saw the air too much with your hand, thus: but use all gentleness; for, in the very torrent, tempest, and, as I may say, whirlwind of your passion, you must acquire a temperance that may give it smoothness.
No break. Of it offends me to the soul to hear a porewig-pated robustious fellow tear a passion, — to very rags, — to rend the ears of the groundlings, who, for the most part, are capable of nothing but inevitable dumb show and noise. I would have such a fellow whipped for oerdoing Termagant; it out-Herods Herod. Pray you avoid it. [Be not too tame, neither, but let your own discretion be your tutor; suit the action to the word, with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature; for any thing so overdone is from the purpose of playing, whose end, both at the first and now, was and is, to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature, to show virtue her own feature, scorn her own picture, and the very age and body of the time, — his form and pressure.
